To think that EA will do something that will cost millions just because a few people on a petition want it is just rediculous.

First, how do you know it was the petition itself that got them to release the dll, did they specifically say that it was the petition that got them to release it? If it was, then there is a huge difference between asking them to release the source to a dll and asking them to develop a game (mainly the millions of dollars it will take to develop and publish it).
