Everyone claims to be right...everyone claims to have the one and only truth, the complete picture, the coveted knowledge that no one else has...

Won't it be interesting, in the end, to find out what's REALLY going on? I mean, what would everyone do if they found out that no one had the right idea? And what if everyone, and I mean everyone, had a small piece of the truth- like a piece of a puzzle- and the real truth will never be known until all the pieces come together? What if we're ALL right?

There have been millions of religions- if not billions- since humanity came into existence. Who's to say that any one religion is any more "right" than any other? Looking at history, it is possible, even probable, that in several thousand years today's primary religions will be but minor cults practicing somewhere in the background.

Tolerance is key. Billions of humans inhabit this planet, and no two share the exact same set of beliefs. There is always a possibility, however small, that someone else may be the one who knows "the way" and not you. Follow the teachings of your religion, but don't allow yourself to fall into the trap of hating others for their beliefs.

You'll never know for sure until you die, after all.
