Scampglyde51ScampBlazer"Most" web sites are run on "clunky apache". Unless you have some integrated .Net stuff, there is no reason to use IIS along with all its vulnerabilities.

Agreed. I made the mistake of attempting to use IIS for Digital Depiction. It's really more of a pain than anything. APACHE 4 LYFE.

I still believe Apache is clunky for an average user. Average is the keyword there.

I think I'm average user. Apache just has the right amount of configuration options needed.

No, half the users that have the internet are oblivious to anything besides "send", "save", "go", "IE", etc.
