IRON-FARTHow many people went to Afghanistan in 2000? These four did amongst many others. 800 people detained. But why were they detained? Did they do anything? How long did it take to establish that nothing wrong was done? Like I said, if I went there, would I be arrested? If I was somewhere I shouldn't be yes. Would I be detained? for a short while, yes. Would I be taken to Cuba and be detained further for years without being suspected of anything, be interrogated and tortured?? No. Because I'm not a black Muslim from Brixton.

Why do people keep interpreting that being let free as them saying "They did nothing wrong". No where has anyone said a single person that has been released has been innocent. They have said they do not have enough evidence to make it 100% sure, and they did not want to prolong what they thought might end up as an innocent verdict. They could have gone to trial and would have been found guilty.
