IRON-FARTIf they spend life in prison, they live in fear. I mean, you are housed with tons of other criminals, who could potentially attack you. Have you seen that part in the Shawshank Redemption where Andy Dufraine gets attacked by those 3 guys? That kind of thing is not entirely uncommon. Its a more gruelling experience that taking the needle.

But then all this brings up the question, "When is it OK to sentence someone to death when you can throw them in prison?"

Sending them to prision for life takes tax dollars to house them, give them electricity and all the other extra crap we shoudlnl't be giving them, it takes time and pay to give to gurads who risk tehre lives when they don't have to around these types of people. If we would just kill them wiht a bullet and throw them in a unmarked grave it would be no problems.
