

---

Subject: Re: Hurricane Katrina Aftermath

Posted by DarkDemin on Mon, 05 Sep 2005 00:34:14 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

SuperFlyingEngi wrote on Sun, 04 September 2005 19:59MrBob wrote on Sun, 04 September 2005 15:26Shut up. Just shut up. Why couldn't you write about how people can help, thanking other nations for their support, or maybe about how this disaster could have been prevented? Instead, you had to bring your bullshit politics in the field. You, Kennedy, and NPR are not helping the liberal cause, the victims, or anyone else with your empty accusations and blame. Even I have had enough of your crap.

The relief helicopters were shot at. Gang leaders have power over the city for the first time, and they love it. It doesn't matter to them if people are dying or if food and water supply is lacking. They've become warlords, and they want to keep it that way. The leaders of the rescue effort didn't expect this to happen, so actual military force wasn't counted as necessary.

Now pray, give a dollar if you are able, be thankful, stop blaming people, and pray.

1) There's not very much individuals can do to help, unless they happen to own a Skycrane helicopter or something. Sure, you can adopt a family, and I applaud everyone who does it, but there aren't as many people as there need to be with the economic ability to support another family for at least a month.

2) What, you thought I didn't appreciate the help other countries offer? Duh, of course I do. But, "Thank you England" might as well be spam because nothing will come of it.

3) This could have been prevented, or at least reduced in severity, if the government had kept funding the levees, some of which broke. But George Bush in his lying way said, "There's no way this could have been foreseen." I don't know about you, but I find that quite disgusting.

And yes, of course I will be donating to this cause, and more than a dollar, too.

1) You're stupid because people can volunteer to go and help with the Red Cross for supply distribution. I know a couple of people that are heading there right now.

2) I am glad people have enlightened me on the situation of countries providing aid.

3) The government has been attempting to have those levees upgraded for years but corrupt city counsels kept pocketing the money or redirecting it to self interest items. Stop blaming George Bush for the problems they had in the first few days, the governors should have declared a state of emergency as soon as they realized the magnitude. There is very little a president can do in this situation, if anyone should be blamed it should be the director of FEMA or the local and state officials. Bill Clinton as stated before basically told CNN to "STFU" on this situation with the president. The black caucus leader should be ashamed of himself, along with the mayor of New Orleans for saying "The president doesn't care about black people."

---