Ironically I was just thinking when something like this would happen "to me". I can't say I knew her very well, but my fiancée and I (who are both big gamers) were just discussing the possibility of someone that we know through gaming having something terrible happen to them - such as this.

Anyone that gives something selflessly to another should be praised regardless of how large or small that contribution or intention for the contribution was.

Like my gamer-dedicated-life tombstone will say...

"A.F.K."
