Hahah... this is a cool development, though. I've always contended that our "perfect" conditions to support life could, based on probability, happen near any of the billions of stars out there. This is neat stuff!

That's like claiming that the "perfect" conditions required to make love could, based on probability, happen near any of the billions of people out there.

Anyone worth their time knows it's not only possible, not only probable, but actually happens every day.
