
Subject: Re: Sudan Threatens To Cut Off The World's Supply Of Coca-Cola
Posted by crazfulla on Wed, 13 Jun 2007 06:45:35 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

warranto wrote on Mon, 04 June 2007 17:21Gasp! The horror!

If anything they should be encouraging the consumption of soda.

Hmm.. I can see it now:

Skinny kid on the news

"I would like that personally thank the Sudan Ambassador for causing an end to the Soda industry. Because of him, I lost 50 lbs! I am now for healthy that I ever have been. It's all because of you Mr. Ambassador! I love you!"

20 years later

(America invades Sudan because of... well, do they really need a reason?)

Sudan Ambassador

"Why are these Americans winning? I thought they were all supposed to be fat slobs!"

Military person

"They were until you caused the end of the Soda industry!"

Sudan Ambassador

"What have I done? I've ruined us all!"

Also, in the 20 years prior to the american invasion, the US saved billions of dollars which would have been wasted on junk water. They now spend this on military hardware and technology while Sudan grows poorer from the lack of income from the US and rest of world (Britain Australia etc would probably jump into bed with the US), it's military forces wilting in the shade of the US' military might.

Sorry for the double post just had to ad that.
