Walked into the kitchen to get some biscuits just now. Freaky thing happened, all of a sudden there was a "pop" and little bits of something flew everywhere.

It happened again as I got closer. I nearly wet my pants.

After woods I looked in the kitchen for what it could have been. I found these seed-pods on the window-sill. No-one knew what they were.

In the middle of photography my camera went haywire, switching between modes quickly until finally locking up after I gave it a thump. Probably just because it's partially faulty, chowing the most expensive batteries in 30 minutes seems to be a vital clue.

Anyone have an idea what plant these seed-pods belong to?
