Less time should be spent on curing horrible illnesses, and more time should be spent on preventing them. Lifestyle plays a major part of whether you get cancer, or you live to be 100.

Try telling that to the kids who got deadly hereditary diseases and die at age 6 or 8 or 19. Somewhere along the line, a medical breakthrough must come in.

Another person's life should not be decided by the limitations of your primordial beliefs.

What takes priority? A zygote or a person who has evolved beyond that stage to full life, individual identity and unique personality?
