^And someday, you may realize that there are more important things than pissing on people themselves.

^Is this thread important enough to you? It appears to be such.

Quote:Sir Phoenixx: The only economically benefit that would come out of it [the war] is the business oportunities that came out of post-war-iraq, which would be there rather the US was involved, or not.

America's actions regarding this war seem to price that "benefit" without any care. Growing numbers of Iraqi civilians and our own countrymen die as time passes. Perhaps France is the smart one here, planning different approaches to the Iraq issue than rushing in with the pure force hailed by America's leaders. Our plan obviously left no control following the killing of whoever we deemed as "evil."

Finally, the France we speak of is only the government of the French. The split opinions in America at this time are clear to us, but do you really think everyone in France backs what their government does?
