

---

Subject: Devinoch and Maxis Part Ways.

Posted by MrBob on Fri, 07 Mar 2003 15:53:28 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

Griever92spotelmobigejoe14Personally, I think that EA should now be considered a monopoly. But, in order for EA to become a monopoly is to merge with another big company like Sony Computer Entertainment of America (SCEA). The law that keeps monopolies from forming is keeping EA at bay from taking total control over the computer entertainment industry which is a good thing.

EA is just eating up these small companies to gain more money just like John D. Rockefeller was doing in the oil industry was back when. He was then greeted by many angry people and an upset government. Once the government passed the anti-monopoly law, The Rockefeller oil industry was hurt majorly hurt, but still kept going.

So EA is bordering on a very unhealthy obsession.

they are putting in a bid to buy sega, is that close enough for you?

Who gives a crap, its sega.

WHAT?! n00b, one of the US's first game companies. They may be low on $, but think. EA will not stop 'till every game in the store has their logo on it, and no one else's. They are gonna want one HUGE studio,

Sierra was cool too, they've been around for 20 or so years. Poor Sierra Anyway, yes EA IS becoming a monopoly. Just as I feared, Maxis may be next on EA's doom list. It's time. We should rally together to make the best game company ever:

- Former Westwood Employees

- The Westwood fans (us )

And if Maxis and/or SEGA goes, they can join too. EA WILL PAY!! :twisted:

And one of the reason's The Sims Online didn't do well is because many Maxis fans aren't all big about online playing. Besides, The Sims Online was just for hormone-whipped teens/pervs anyway.

---