Indeed, it looks more like the LCD matrix has been crushed and irreversably damaged... your best bet is probably a new screen tbh...

While you could get another of that same model of monitor with a broken backlight and merge the two into one working unit as suggested above it's a lot of hassle and theres no guarantee it will work at the end of it.

EDIT: Oh, and.... is that mould growing on the corner of the screen? Looks like some sort of plant or something on the corner of the image...
