Even if it was patented, it's not like you could really be sued or anything... I wouldn't be afraid of breaking copyright laws of a free object, because the worst that would really happen is you get asked to remove it, or get banned. The chances of police finding out and fining you if minute, and the constitution (well, for the united states anyway) says we have the right to sue over anything thats is of a value of $50 or more (I think, I need to double check on it) so big deal.

now that I'm done with that history lesson, lol, you really should credit Scrin, even if your not sure if it really belongs to him, or if you just don't like him. But one way or another, the hud is pretty cool, but it seams... a little too empty for me. Although, that could be an advantage if you think about it, you can see more around you.
