When someone in real life asks you a question, you don't tell'em to just fucking google it. Perhaps there is another reason why they're asking you? They respect your opinion? They want to get to know you better? They want to integrate themselves?

Of course, in real life they generally don't type their question into a computer which could have provided them the answer in less time than it took to type the question by just entering a few relevant words into the search box and hitting enter.
