I was trying not to laugh at this, as there have been violent games around for years cough unreal cough

However, then I saw this part:

Quote:

This year, the Supreme Court will make a landmark decision about video-game violence. A California law now makes it illegal for a merchant to sell a Mature-rated game to a minor; the law imposes a $1,000 fine. But the Entertainment Software Association (ESA) has sued to overturn the law.

And personally I think its lame that this country is so money driven that associations are suing just to make sure parents have less control over what their kids buy. -.-

Bible is an awful game and no kid would ever want to play it.
