

---

Subject: Re: Questions I would like to pose to athiests

Posted by blunts on Sat, 16 Apr 2011 04:37:44 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

[quote title=reborn wrote on Thu, 13 January 2011 04:33]If there is no deity that created the universe, how did the universe come to be? Specifically I am talking about the creation of something from nothing. If we are to believe the "Big Bang Theory" then where did the Two giant gas clouds come from? How do you get something from nothing? Where does all matter come from?

Why do so many people feel the need to worship?

If there is no significance to life, no meaning to it, you must reflect that life is nothing more than an experience that will end, and therefore be a waste of time?

Are we as humans different to other animals? We have more intelligence and we have higher reasoning. Why are we the only ones?

If God does not exist, then can someone still hope for better times when in despair? Is hope just a random chance of roulette? There is no universal force of fairness and equality, no Karma?[/quote]

Quantum physics can explain most of this. Kinda like how things can indeed be in more than one place at one time, or how atoms can exist and then just not exist for no reason at all. Or how the impossible (ie a dinosaur wearing a pink tutu singing lady gaga can appear in front of you then vanish) people feel the need to worship because w/o this where would many of the weak minded people morals end up. If it weren't for worship then people would just do whatever fearing no consequences. And way back when, when worship started they were worshipping stars.

We are not the only ones. It's called evolution. And I'm sure in the next million years or so we will see a higher evolutionary product of ourselves.

As for the final question in your statement. Hope is for the weak. Realize that things are bad and like any other action that gets its opposite yet equal reaction that it will change. Of course there is no fairness or equality. Look at our world, or civilization for this matter. Why is it that there are people starving and people eating like there's no tomorrow. Why did the tsunami hit Japan and only fuck their shit up. If the world were fair and equal then events like this would bone the entire world in the same fashion it did Japan. However this does not exist. As for karma, it's an extreme set of coincidence that is the same as the law I stated earlier for every action there is an equal yet opposite reaction.

Now if you made it this far you deserve to read this from me.

Religion and worship is a much needed part of life. Without this process the world would be a much more violent and full of despair because we would not have the people that believe if they do something wrong or unjust that they are going to burn in hell forever because of this. If in the beginning of days nothing ever happened for people to want to worship (whether it was actually a god, some person making shit up, or for the realists out there an extra-terrestrial being) then we would be in a far worse off place. Im only glad that I live in a day in age where the majority of things can be proven or disproven, because I dislike and find things that there are no physical evidence for extremely ridiculous. If I cant see it, touch it, smell it, taste it, or have rational explanation for then it more than likely doesnt exist. If it walks like a duck, quacks like a duck, looks like a duck, smells like a duck, chances are pretty good its a duck.

Another philosophical moment broughten to you by blunts.

---