Automobiles/transportation would be your best bet as they are so common in lots of forms. But the biggest positive you missed in that area would be the jobs they have created all over the world.

Without them we would be lil more than we were before the 1900's.

Yea, the pollution sucks... and anyone who owns a oil company can go get fucked, but from people working on assembly lines to your local mechanic... we no longer drive them, they drive the world. At least I'm told, that's how it goes in Russia.
Yes and no. If cars were not invented we would either have eliminated the need to travel this much or found other (better?) ways to travel.
It would have probably been coal
