I closed #FoD, and #fodsvr01 which are no longer based on the n00bstories network. The close message says where the channel was moved to.

I have repeatedly said that I was NOT leaving on bad terms, however you are taking it that way.

As I own the forcesofdiversion.com domain, it's within my power to control where the subdomains point to. Many people use the irc.forcesofdiversion.com domain to access the n00bstories network and channels like mine and The Pits. I have been sending globals to remind people not to use the forcesofdiversion.com domain any longer so that I can re-route it back to you.

It seems funny that you guys didn't want to give Dominion Guild control of their domain after you left them, but now when the shoe is on your foot, things are different.

I just took the route of least resistance in the split. As I have said MANY MANY TIMES, I completely understand your desire not to be attacked. You must remember that we are dealing with tiny infant children here and the only way to "save yourself" from being tainted with my problems is to sever your ties with me. Why do you think I obtained more links on my network? I knew you guys weren't going to put up with this much longer. I wasn't going to sit around and fight with people I like and respect over this. Especially when you started blaming all the problems on me instead of where the blame belongs.

I know why you didn't want to be linked anymore. I'm not arguing that. I had to do things the way I did because if I had done any of the steps in a different order, I wouldn't have been able to leave the clan's server in the best possible condition to do business alone before I left.

This was not an act of hostility. It was the path of least resistance.
