SomeRhinoNobody is born a homosexual; that is a myth. Over 80% of homosexual males have a father that was abusive, negligent, or left their family. There are also countless examples of straights turning homosexual and homosexuals turning straight during their lifetime.

And by what authority do you call someone wrong for saying homosexuality is wrong?

Moral relativism is full of loopholes that cannot be resolved.

i'd like to see proof backing up that statement... it's not a true statistic.

as for the guy who said they find it hard to believe the kkk would care about the community... if you knew anything about the kkk you would know that they get involved very much in betterment of communities. even though many of us feel their ideas are whacked, they do involve themselves alot in clean up projects and community service. they just spread intolerance with them while they're doing it.

as for the bible, just to add my own 2 cents in, i don't believe in god or the reliability of the bible. it's a great book to read(yes, i've read it a few times) but in my opinion, it holds no more credibility than aesops fables does. but, i have no problem if others wish to believe in it.

as for gay being a choice or not... many of those who believe it is wrong do so based on religion. since the common religious belief(except hindu) states that man is the only creature with a soul and free choice, how would the argument that it is a choice hold up when you take in account animals in the wild who engage in homosexual behavior?

personally, i don't care one way or another about homosexuality.

on a side note, i do have a couple gay guys renting out one of my houses. i've never met them, but i'm hoping that they burn down the house with one of their scented candles so i can collect the insurance :twisted:
