BlazerC4Prox, have you considered that your computer might have a virus? Most viruses silently infect any exe file that you run. All we know is that you kept connecting to the RG network with a client that had changed code, we did the only thing we could since you have to admit it fits the profile of someone trying to hack.

If you are truly innocent, I suggest you scan your computer for viruses. If you dont have a virus scanner use the free online one: <http://housecall.trendmicro.com/>

If you find that you were infected let us know and we will remove the ban. Otherwise it stays at least until the RG network settles in and we have more time to invetigate whats going on with your client.

I actually happen to KNOW I have a virus. I tried to intercept it and cure it, but it's just not possible. It owns some of my exe files, but i'm still waiting to get my windows XP cd back so I can reformat my computer. So leave it at that, fine, I just want people to know I wouldn't wanna try to hack an anti cheat program when i'm a cheat hater...
