I'm going to have Doom 3 in about 20 - 30 minutes, Can't wait! I'll post some screen shots of me getting my ass kicked a little later ok. I just can't wait my dad bought it this morning and he's only at work for half a day today cause it's my sisters birthday so after he gets home I'll install Doom 3 and take a few screenshots. I got a PC Gamer magazine yesterday, Doom 3 looks really good. ID is also very good at making sure that there are just about no bugs with their games except maybe hardware issues and such. My computer is above the minimum requirements so I think I should be able to play it fine.

Minimum Requirements:

Processor: 1.5 ghz

RAM: 384 mb

Video Card: ATI Radeon 8500 or better (Dunno about NVidia)

Mine Computer:

Processor: 2.1 ghz

RAM: 512 mb

Video Card: ATI Radeon 9600 Pro

My computer is probably about mid range, I'll see what I can put it up to for the max
OMG OMG OMG OMG MY DAD IS HERE NOW WITH DOOM 3!!!!

I hear they ripped off the System Shock scare techniques, including voice\text logs of the crewmen who were inhabiting the station that you're attacking.

System Shock 1 and 2 did a great job of atmosphere with the logs, a lot of them were downright bone chilling - hearing how the crew died and how you're all alone in a station of mutants and cyborgs with an AI that wants to kill you doesn't help make you feel any more secure.

You never even played the Shock series, did you? There's a reason why System Shock 1 and 2 are called the scariest games of all time.

The plot is "similar" to 1993's Doom.

I've had Doom3 for about a day and I have to say that it's a really nice game. I'm able to play it at 1024x768 with the second-highest detail setting (I don't have enough memory for the highest setting--only 512 MB). This game is scary as hell, especially if you're, like me, playing at 2 AM with all the lights off.

P.S. IceSword7, use Daemon Tools.

Ralph Waldo Emerson once said, "In every work of genius we recognize our own rejected thoughts: they come back to us with a certain alienated majesty."

Although I'm giving it a slightly different connotation, it's meaning still holds true. The same idea or concept can pop into the heads of persons A and B without one having stolen it from the other, so stop being concerned with who thought of it first.

And you couldn't have picked simpler things...saying Doom stole the concept of the journals for effect is like saying that it also stole the concept of having dim lighting and shadows for effect. These ideas were certainly around before System Shock in other video games, they were around before video games in old horror movies, and they were even around before old horror movies in bloody campfire tales.

if i can get something for free why not?

i have a job and all that but £40 for everygame i wanna play..

esp seeing as most of the games released nowadays are piles of shit anyway ( downloaded 20+ games.. i have only like atleast 3 and some of these where hyped to be big )

i can say Doom 3 is a game worth buying i may buy it just to try out the multiplayer..

also there is this shit of games being released in one contry weeks or even months and in some cases YEARS before other contrys

why should i have to wait.. its bullshit the game is not released here in the UK from what i hear for another week..

why do i have to wait for a UK version of the game when the USA one runs fine.. whats the point in the delay?

Quote: I think you're sorry losers.
are you not the loser if you waste money on a game and then it turns out to be shit

I agree. Game warez is like going down to the shops and getting a coffee maker to "evaluate it" with the option of buying. If you don't like it, you still get to keep the coffee maker. How is that fair. It costs the company money to make and distribute the product. The only solid argument for things like file sharing music and games is that the products are over priced and far higher than what they could sell them for while still having a very good profit. But, there's also an argument that file sharing helps the industry.

Check out this project. It's basically saying that when people get to try things out, there's more of a likeliness that they'll buy them; and wouldn't have bought them had they not been allowed to try them out first. What it forgets to mention is the amount of people getting products for free by and large negates the amount of people that "buy things if they like them", although maybe not in production costs.

Actually, it's the stores that will get cut short, and even then it's the company that's losing money, no specific individuals. So, the big time companies will get their money and continue to profit, while it's the local companies and game providers that will get the short end of the stick. But because of how the company won't go bankrupt because of a low selling game, because they'll make money somehow else. Everybody benefits from this...but it's the warez downloader that benefits most.

1. Mr. Ed --- a talking horse tv show from the ancient times.
2. Good for you. You might have been the one person to get the sales over 600k
3. No. A percentage doesn't go to us the working crew. We see a bonus once every year based on the team and studio revenue & performance. If sales suffer than everyone suffers. People at EALA this year got NOTHING. A select few got a small percentage of their target bonus based on annual salary. A decent group got nothing because EA didn't ship much last year from EALA and they moved studios... not withstanding monies they saved closing old ones down (like Westwood) ... instead they basically let the employee pay for the move and the missing profit. Not very many companies have profit sharing or royalties either. That is old news. This is big business and the small guy is dependant on that bonus because overtime doesn't exist. No time and a half... no extra pay at all.

Don't forget who makes this crap. The little guy. The execs approve game design docs and project plans and demos... the pissants are the ones who will not get any perks if sales suck. You think execs suffer? At 400k a year... who's going to miss a bonus that would have payed a % of 25% of that annual salary. Those guys will still get a fair cut of it... while some lesser people who make art or design or code get jack.

Wanna make games and spend 2 months straight 7 days a week at work? It's fun when you're 22 years old and single. Try it when you're 30+ with other things in life... like not having a vacation for 10 years. Don't know where you get that % from but think what you will. It hurts the grunt.

You can pirate software, but pirating games is moronic. You go through the trouble of actually making it work, and then finding a CD-key that works for both offline and online. I like the feeling of actually owning a game, just like how I feel about owning 95% of the entire C&C universe of games.

TaximesAnd you couldn't have picked simpler things...saying Doom stole the concept of the journals for effect is like saying that it also stole the concept of having dim lighting and shadows for effect. These ideas were certainly around before System Shock in other video games, they were around before video games in old horror movies, and they were even around before old horror movies in bloody campfire tales.

System Shock had audio logs back in 1993. If you know of an earlier game that had this, feel free to tell. And I've never seen a movie featuring a guy picking up and listening to audio logs constantly, btw

That aside, I don't really care if they used the idea. There probably won't be a SS3 anyway.

Anna Parovski's last log is especially good, btw

Well as far as Doom 3 goes, let me say that the engine is absolutely amazing. Those people are genius's, this game looks far better than anything else currently available and it runs better than pretty much any new game too. It's astounding, I get higher FPS with Doom 3 than I do with Call of Duty, and it's so fucking pretty. As far as the actual game goes, it's pretty standard shoot everything you see stuff, but it's still pretty fun. I can't wait to see better games based off the engine.

Another way to boost performance is to unpack all the .pk4 files in the base directory, then delete or move the .pk4 files. This way the game doesn't have to unpack the files as you play, so it starts and runs much faster. Of course it takes up a shitload of space (4.5GB).

WRONG!

Have you even played Painkiller? It uses 2x2048x2048 high-res textures (which are extremely sharp), the Havok 2.0 physics engine, and extremely high polygon monsters and levels, and I still get a steady 50 - 70fps on the highest detail and on 1024x768 resolution. Don't forget to mention the amount of bump mapping it uses like Doom 3.

I've played Painkiller. It looked very nice, but nowhere near Doom 3. Doom 3 is definitely the best engine available right now, followed by Crytek (although Crytek runs like ass, they need to optimize the damn thing).

I still think Source will be the best engine. The only thing it lacks from Doom 3 is the advanced lighting engine, everything else is superior.

I wasn't really basing the engine quality on how good it looks; Painkiller owns the Doom 3 engine in a sort of a way because Painkiller has nice graphics and killer performance at the same time, while Doom 3 has killer graphics, but not as good performance.

Well, the thing is Doom 3 looks a lot better than Painkiller. And it runs very well too. I guarantee you if Painkiller implemented all the things Doom 3 does (if it even can) then it would be unplayable. Painkiller is an extremely basic engine, it doesn't really do anything extraordinarily well.

Uh, right.. so if I went down to the shops and took an apple, I could say to the shopkeeper "psht, I have better things to actually SPEND my money on", that would be ok? What about the costs involved in the whole thing (including distribution), not to mention the cash the shop payed to buy the apples? Maybe you should read a thing or 2. What the hell is point of spending a lot of hard work making something, only to have people take it from each other while giving nothing back to you. That is not how industries work. When you make something, you want to sell it to get back what you worked for and more.. a profit.

Now if the game were OVERPRICED and more than what it could be sold for while still making a profit and the working class getting their bonus from it - then you'd have a point.

You can't justify your theft at all.

Piracy is theft. It is your problem - you're causing it.

Extrapolate - if everyone stole their games instead of buying them, what would happen then?

Then again, I doubt you care. Scum.

YOU FUCKING RETARDS.

Welcome to the world of "Thinking about the Future."

If you don't pay for your games, then people will stop making them. If they don't make them, you won't have any games to download for free and play. Then you'll have to leave your basement and walk into the light of the sun where girls will taunt you and laugh at you because of your pathetic lack of muscle and pasty white skin.

xC4pRoX what's the point of buying a game that costs more than $39.99 and you're only interested in the single player?

If you enjoy it, you ought to pay the money for it.

Demolition manGames that don't bring out demo's or release world wide at the same time ask to be warezed.

I understand what you're saying, but you're still wrong. While that IS usually the response of the world, that doesn't make it right.

And now, for the most idiotic person here:

IceSword7And an apple and computer game are 2 completly different things. I might not be wasting my money on this computer game so i could buy the apple.

The apple maybe needed to live...the computer game isnt.

You defeat your own argunemnt here. If you could argue that the apple was needed for life, then maybe you could say that it would be ok to steal it, since stealing is "less bad" than death.

But you don't. You fuckin say that you don't need the computer game to survive. In that case, DON'T FUCKING DOWNLOAD IT. If you want it, pay for it. If you don't, then we shouldn't be having this conversation.

IceSword7And as for "These people work hard to get this game out" well thats not my problem is it?

You fuckin waste of humanity. You screw them over, then you get screwed over by everyone else. Prisoner's dilemma, bitch.

I hope you get hit by a bus.

Now, as for my personal policy? Some games I do download, but I treat them like sharware. If I like them, I buy them; if I don't, I delete them. But two things are always true:

1. there is no demo available.
2. I delete it if I don't buy it.

Welcome to the world of being a contributing member of society.

You should just buy a game if you like it. . . I bought Doom 3 and didn't even think of downloading it like I do with most games. I downloaded BF 1942, didn't like it then I uninstalled it, I still have the CD somewhere, but then on X-Play I saw a cool StarWars mod for Bf 1942 so I went out and bought it just for a mod that I wanted to play online. . . I have downloaded many game, such as Dawn of the modern world or something like that, I hated that game and was very glad I didn't spend $40 on it, but FarCry, I tried downloading that, failed, so I bought it, I love the game and am very happy I bought it. Elder Scrolls 3: Morrowind I downloaded it excelent Single Play, no multiplayer and it's medieval(SP?) then I went and bought it because I liked it. In other words, download it to try it, if you like it buy it, otherwise uninstall it, delete, or something.

Wooooooooooooo Lol calm down there tough guy.

I just think its funny how you kick and yell on an online forum about how piracy is wrong. But if you were to do the same things around your friends you would just get ripped on for being so into the anti piracy movement.

The game is not needed in life but it does give you something to do when you are sitting home. Im bored sitting at home (Full after eating 15 stolen apples) i see doom3 for free on <http://WWW.SUPRNOVA.ORG> what am i going to do not download it and stay bored out of my mind because PIRACY IS WRONG? Hell no, i dont know these people therefore i dont care if there game is succesful or not.

And i really couldnt careless if they stoped making game (They never will) but still it doesnt bother me at all.

If it will make you feel better. Ill head over to target and steal doom3 right out of the store because downloading games is just soooooo wrong.

Suppose you make something that took a few years. Perhaps you spent a bunch of time after hours (no overtime). You gave up huge chunks of time for this thing you made that you could have spent with your wife or kid or God forbid --- your rotten hideous girlfriend.

Now put it on a shelf to sell. Can't wait to see a nice bonus for all the work... maybe even royalties from how many profits it makes... well screw you buddy... some punk just stole it and you didn't get a goddamn cent. Oh wait... another little bastard just downloaded it for nothing... no $$ for you again. Oh wait... does this even make sense to you dipshits.

I won't waste anymore time on this subject because some of you are never going to learn until you get shit shoveled on you and the tables are turned... what a waste of air.

Well, it doesn't seem like there can be a win-win solution to satisfy both sides. Consumers don't want to waste their money, but game companies want money for their hard work.

(A) Team works on game. Game turns out to be crappy, but everyone buys it anyway just to try it. It turns out that they don't like it. Nothing much to do except lend it to a friend or use it as a coaster. Consumers feel like they've been swindled out of money. (Like I said, this could only go on for so long, since people would get a hint and people would stop buying it.) Losers? The people who bought the game; the team got their money.

(B) Team makes a great game, but everyone downloads it instead of buying it. Naturally the team is the loser in this case; they never got the money they deserved for making such a great game.

Consumers want to try things before they buy it. Game designers and company want to be paid for their work. Both desires are legitimate, but while there is always the possibility of a win-win, there is more of a possibility of a loser for one side. Neither desires are truly wrong, but encouraging a try and buy attitude is the best way to go.

Official demos are great. 2 official demos came out for 'call of duty', each containing a level, nearly every american weapon, all the scripting from the full version of the level, etcetra. I thought they were awesome and played them over and over and ended up buying the game. The value in them was replay. As you replayed them you could take different approaches, take new weapons from dead soldiers, that sort of thing. When a game can show its-self to be good without giving too much away then it should be a great hit. People appreciate when a company releases a demo for people to get a taste of what they are considering buying. In all honestly I would have bought the game despite the demos but that isn't really the point.

I'm dead tired of buying games. I have over 15 games I BOUGHT since 2001. Let's say the average cost was $39.99 (which is what the cost for a newly released game is on my local software store,) that's about $450. I only liked about 1/3 of them, and those are $300 I'm never getting back ... I just went to the software store, checked out what's new and cool and picked up 2 or 3 games every once in a while, BUT I CAN'T SELL THEM CAUSE NOBODY WANTS TO BUY THEM.

First game I've ever downloaded was doom 3, and just because its about $60 with tax, that's crazy. Now I have games I never bought, like GTA: Vice City, Final Fantasy VII, max payne 2, etc. I'm done with buying games!!!!!!!!!!!!111oneoen!

Am I missing something here?

If you download the game, that hurts the people that made the game...there is very little argument about that.

However, if you steal the game from Target, for example, you are only hurting Target, not the game developers. Target already paid for the game. It is irrelevant to the game developers what Target does with the games once they buy them.

It does make a difference in the long run if you steal from Target. PC sales break down in 2 ways. Sold to stores (pre-orders can have affect on these numbers) and "Sell Through" (this number is what is actually sold to the consumer FROM the stores. The actual number of copies sold with sell through numbers is what the publisher is interested in. This is what allows the marketing department to make further calls on if you see a sequel and so forth. That also lets the publisher know if they should drop the sale price like you see on Renegade now... $9.99 I think it is.

So when you steal from target you are ripping off target but you are still upsetting the balance with other factors. Besides... Target is a decent store... WalMart on the other hand... they dictate all kinds of stuff to the industry because they sell tons of product. Ever wonder why the boxes are much smaller... Walmart. That's who.

Kazaa and Imod seem to be the most popular illedged website/icons around. What people don't understand is that downloading free music or software is robbing the computer industry and illegality isn't preventing people from downloading this software! So the police should tracking the people who are downloading this crap and arresting them.

What place accepts opened software? Most of them no longer accept returns, because people can just copy the games and return it. Same goes for renting a game--pfft, who does that? The wrongful way a right idea can be used is why we must all suffer.

Neither A and B are possible; they're just two opposite extremes of the same spectrum. My point was that both desires are rooted in legitimate concerns: consumers not wanting to be swindled out of their money, and the gaming industry and all of their workers getting the money they deserve. Furthermore, even though both desires are rooted in rightful intentions, they can get abused--hence, the examples of (A) and (B). It's just a domino effect that mutilates a good thing, and why we all suffer, if you think about it. And a sad thing, too, that shifts the balance here is that there are a lot more people that pirate than game designers who make crappy games, most likely.

There's only one way both sides win--consumer buys a company's game, and likes it. If consumer buys the game and doesn't like it, consumer loses and producer wins (they got their money anyway). If consumer tries the game (pirates) before buying it, and doesn't like it, consumer missed out on wasted money and producer loses.

I don't need to explain that further. It's just unfortunate that there are few options out there, leaving piracy the most common option. Yes, it's stealing, but to criticize it as simply wrong and shouldn't be done PERIOD means that the consumer would ultimately suffer. You've got a fifty-fifty chance of liking or not liking a game when you buy it, and if you continually buy games that you don't like, you'll soon stop. And if that happened, it would be the same consequence to the gaming industry as piracy. What's the incentive of making a better game when you'll still get money no matter what you produce?

If there were more official demos out there, there'd be less piracy, a game would get more exposure to more people (especially if they're anti-piracy), and if they like it, more people could go out and buy the game. Everyone wins, but call me an optimist.

And I'm not sure about reviews, because my opinion of the game rarely coincides with the reviewer (look at Renegade). But this just opens up another can of worms...:-\ xC4pRoXEDIT: If you think murder or rape can be compared to downloading a game off the internet, you're a fucking idiot.

A crime's a crime. Whether it's speeding, stealing, or murder, it's all illegal. There may be different levels of punishment for each of those crimes, but yet they're still what? What are they? Oh yeah, crimes. No matter how you look at it, IT'S A CRIME. Whether or not it's a lesser of the evils, it's still what? ILLEGAL! You can't justify stealing a game because raping some poor innocent child/woman is worse. You're not forced to choose a lesser of the evils, so therefore you can't justify the crime.

I believe he is trying to say that, if you can get away with it then a lot of people will do it. Like for instance, speeding. If they can get away with it, they'll do it. Same as downloading music/warez. People can get away with it, so they do it.

Granted it takes different kinds of people to commit murder and rape, but the general idea is the same. If they think (or can) get away with it, they'll do it. That's how he's trying to connect the two together. People will do what they want if they can get away with it, or at least think that they can get away with it.

But I shoudl not create it create it because I will never be able to play Doom 3, even if I downloaded it, because this is a crappy computer, and I can barely run Renegade on almost lowest details. I'm not supporting piracy or anything, but comparing menial crimes like piracy or speeding to rape and murder is pure idiocy. I speed all the time, I download music. You're right, I do it because I can get away with it. But I would never do it if I thought someone would be hurt by it. Even if I could get away with murder or rape, I would never dream of doing that.

I guess there are some, generally more conservative type of people who never disobey the rules no matter what they may be. I'm not like that, I do what I do within the boundaries of my own moral principle. The only time I ever pirate a game is to see if it's worth buying, if not I delete it. There's a lot of shitty games out there that aren't worth playing and certainly not worth buying.

everyone talks about how they don't want to buy shit games... I can't remember the last time I bought a shitty game.

I bought I think 2 games this year. Knights of the Old Republic and Farcry (more for the art and to check it out for new tech). I enjoyed both. I made sure I asked quite a few people about them before I laded the cash out. Didn't take a bunch of failed purchases to find some games I enjoyed.

Just doesn't make sense how you can argue that buying games only to find out they suck is your own fault. Farcry had a demo so that helped with my decision to buy it.

I agree official demos are the best way to go. Developers need to spend more effort on those.

In most cases, you're only indirectly hurting the people that make the game. That's generally the differnce between the rape and murder and the piracy. One is direct, the other is indirect. It doesn't justify either, but technically, both hurt people and both are crimes. I think that's what whoever-said-it meant when comparing the two.

I'm not putting it on the same level in severity, I'm putting it on the same level of legality. None of those acts are legal. Some individuals (as I said) would commit murder and rape if they could get away with it, or at least if thought they could. I didn't say you would or I would. I said SOME people may.

You can't justify any of the acts. I do agree with downloading to trying it out, but it still can't be justified because either way it's still against the law.

I'm not trying to justify the acts, and I haven't downloaded a game in over a year more or less (although I still get music), and I never kept a game more than a couple days after downloading it. I don't buy very many games now, pretty much only major releases like HL2 and Doom 3, so I'm pretty much never dissappointed. However, I have bought some crap games in the past that were hyped to hell and back and got decent reviews. This is wasted money, $50 flushed right down the drain. If a game doesn't have a demo available, but I'm interested enough to try it and have no other means available, then I may consider pirating it. It will do nothing but increase my chances of buying it, except for major releases I never buy a game without trying it first. The fact is that overall games are very low quality, and very bad, there are only a select few companies that consistently pump out good titles.

And to the guy who said murder, rape, speeding, and piracy are all equally illegal, that's just stupid. Speeding isn't even a misdemeanor, and I'm not sure if piracy is even a felony. The legality of a crime is definitely on a sliding scale.

And another note: I have respect for quality game developers. This includes Westwood, Monolith, Valve, Id, etc. I haven't illegally acquired any of these games in any way. However, there are people like EA, where you never know if their latest game is a cheap cash in or a quality title. Almost all their Bond games are terrible, but the latest one is actually pretty good, it would certainly be ridiculous to waste your money on the shit ones, but at the same time you could easily miss out on a decent game. The same goes for other companies like Atari and whatnot.

Don't be surprised if Pacific Assault and the new Bond from EA are not that great. They seem to change too many things too many times and they get diluted into thinking this mess they've been looking at for a few years is awesome. Notice they picked up Christopher Lee to do voice overs for Scaramanga... that's what they consider when marketing a game... who's on the list of celebrities and music acts. I swear they've given up on the game story in favor of trying to be a hollywood film studio. Oh wait... I'm ranting about EA again... forgive me. LMAO.

I see Half Life 2 on the horizon... that will be a game I buy blindly simply on the strength of the first. If it somehow... and I don't think it will... sucks... then I guess chalk that price tag up to giving the benefit of the doubt to Valve. I think it'll be super cool. Fingers Crossed.

It's all against the law, therefore related to each other. I didn't say they're on the same level of severity. I'm saying that they're all illegal. I never said that speeding is as bad rape, but they are still ILLEGAL. Do you get it now, moron?

IceSword7So you guys are so anti-piracy howcome you arent the nazi's that are passing around the petition to get kazaa banned from the internet.

Personally, I'm a huge fan of the OpenSource project. I've worked on a few GNU things, I'm registered with that shit I can't remember what it's called (I'll edit this post when I remember), and basically every program I've released I put under the GPL.

HOWEVER: I have never released anything on the scale of a 3-D video game. I have huge respect for the people who do. Give them their money. You couldn't do the shit they do; it's not fair to just take it and feel like you're entitled to it. That's like you building a house; then, after you're done, I move in with you. I say, "Well, it would cost too much for me to build this house, and I want somewhere to live. Since you have one, and it won't hurt you to have me in here, I'll just move in. Oh, and I'm inviting some other people I met over Kazaa."

That shit would piss you the fuck off. And it's the same fuckin thing for VG developers.

As for downloading vs rape/murder: indeed, they are very different. However, my point was this: they are both symptomatic of the same thing - a lack of respect for others and concern about their well being. While you say you wouldn't kill someone or rape someone, I wonder. After all, if you can't be trusted in the small things, I sure as hell wouldn't trust you with the large ones.

~Viper - who WOULD kill certain people if it were legal to do so.

Yeah, I don't hold much stock in future EA games. The LOTR RTS has my attention, I'll give it a try. I don't care at all about that Goldeneye game, I think it's just a cheap marketing ploy to try to dilute the name of the original down to the quality of their mediocre crap. I liked the past MOH games, but I'm not too sure about Pacific Assault, I'll wait and see. Atari is just as bad though with their destruction of the Matrix license and incredibly poor use of Terminator. Driver 3 was a decent game but pushed out the door way too early, which makes no sense because it wasn't even a peak season.

And to jball, I see you've become quite angry at me . The point you made in that post is not the same one you were making earlier. Before, you stated that they are all equally illegal, which isn't true. In your newest rant, you've dropped down to saying that they're all illegal, which is obviously true and no one is trying to debate it. The point I was making in the post was that the government does classify crimes as more illegal than others, which is also obvious. Angry? No. Just frustrated at your lack of understanding.

I never said they were equally illegal, at least I didn't mean to. When I said are all the same in legality, I meant it as that they are all illegal, as in they contain no legality because they're illegal. Look at my previous posts before that one. The whole time i've been saying that they're all illegal. I never said that piracy is as serious as rape or muder. My point the entire time is that a crime is a crime and to say that piracy is okay because it's better than murder is just idiotic. Sorry if I didn't make it clear, but I figured that most idiots would understand.

Why am I being childish? Is it because I'm proving my point?

Piracy isn't better than rape or murder. And Ferhago, game sales greatly affect the developer. Sure they've already made their money off of the first shipment, but if the game continues to sell well then they the developer will have a constant source of income. Also, as phlakaton told us, the individuals on the team get a bonus depending on how well the game sells.

Legality (or illegality) is an absolute. Something is either illegal or it isn't. There are no degrees of "illegal."

I guess it's open to interpretation on the word illegal. Sure if something is illegal then that's all there is to it, it is illegal. By the same token a misdomeanor could also be interpreted to be less illegal than a felony judging by legal classification and punishment. Grammatically speaking you're entirely correct, they're both illegal. But the grammatical definition of illegal wasn't exactly my point.

Aircraftkiller You know, instead of pulling a Bill Clinton and arguing on what the definition of "illegal" is, you could just open your eyes to the obvious fact that there's varying degrees in the criminal justice system and that ALL crimes are illegal. Some just carry a larger punishment than others do.

IT WAS THAT SIMPLE!

I don't know if you were referring to me or not, but I said the exact same thing you did in different words in an earlier post. That jball guy didn't understand a damn thing I said and started ranting about how everything is illegal. That's like arguing that an apple is red, and then have the other guy come back and "No, a banana is yellow."

Whatever, it's a stupid argument anyway and I didn't intend for it to go this far. I dropped it awhile ago and started ignoring jballs post, but then someone else came in with a fairly competent post and I responded to it.

Everything illegal IS illegal, regardless of what you think or say. The only differences between the crimes, in the eyes of the law, is their punishments.

That's what I said. Almost verbatim. The only discrepancy is that I said the law treats misdemeanors and felonies differently, not just based on punishment.

Whatever, the whole argument is a giant misunderstanding, we're all arguing basically the same point.

You're just an idiot who joined the argument and started debating with me on something that we agreed about, but you insisted I was wrong on. I was explaining my point to someone earlier in this thread who disagreed with Viper, and then your dumbass self came in here ranting against me. So before you go saying that I don't understand a damn thing, why don't you actually READ previous posts and understand where I'm coming from.

I wasn't joining any debate, I merely mentioned the ridiculousness of comparison between crimes on opposite ends of the spectrum in the first sentence of my post. The entire post was just defining my stance on piracy, you chose to quote and begin arguing with me on the first paragraph and wrote a much longer and much less comprehensible retort to it. I never called you any names, never insulted you, despite 3 whole posts by you calling me either a moron or an idiot. It was a very silly argument in the first place, but you were still unable to hold onto your original stance. You were being very childish, and you're just not worth talking to.

This is the last time I will respond to any of your posts jball, grow up.

My opinion of you still stands. You're an idiot. You didn't understand shit from the first time you posted. I even tried dumbing it down for you to understand, but yet you still disagreed with me on something we AGREE upon. My calling you an "idiot" and "moron" I see as justified. If you had attempted to understand me at all, you wouldn't have been called a "moron" or an "idiot". So keep calling me childish, but when your idiocy is so blatant, I have to call you on it.

In all honesty, I don't want you to respond. You just don't understand anything I say.

I don't see any reason why another rivalry should spawn just because a little misunderstanding went on for two or three pages. Just swallow your pride, both of you, because you were both being idiots. If neither of you realize that, then this argument will never cease.

Just swallow your pride, both of you, because you were both being idiots. If neither of you realize that, then this argument will never cease. I've acted like an idiot many times, but I know I wasn't here. I call them as I see them. He decided to pick up a debate and choose a side and then disagree with me with complete misunderstanding of what I was talking about. If he would have read and understood what I was debating, we would never have disagreed. I may have taken it farther than necessary, but I have yet to see where I was completely out of line.

Edit: either way, I'm done with it. No point to it anymore.

Just some really petty arguments/flaming between certain people, as usual, it seems like that's all that happens here...

Why is it that everybody thinks that just because you agree with AK or somehow resemble his personality that you're a wannabe? I am argumentative, and that's all that there is to it.

None of you resemble me, don't ever compare yourselves like that. You don't want to be me, and you don't want to have my life. Not that it's a bad thing, but that's not really your path in life.

Worry about yourself and how you can improve your personality instead of pretending to emulate someone like me whom you'll never meet.

I never once put myself in likeness to you. I've never wanted to be like you. The fact is, people have qualities in their personalities that resemble each other's, and apparently are argumentative side of me somehow resembles you. Not my choice.

You're quite full of yourself aren't you? It takes a pretty cocky person to assume that someone wants to emulate him or her. It may be true that some want to and often try to emulate your personality, but to assume that one does is just...amazing.

It's simply the honest truth. You write like I do, try to act like I do, and attempt to argue like I do. That's why you get people saying "stop (insert generic term) because you're not him" or whatever else. Not an assumption, just an observation.

But hey, if you want to take a simple observation as me being full of myself, go right ahead... In the end, I'm not the one who's getting accused of what you are. Maybe that means something, or maybe they're wrong. I don't care anymore, I have other things to worry about.

People think I'm trying to be you because they're ignorant, and apparently you're ignorant as well. I'm just trying to get myself to type correctly and have the appearance that I've graduated high school and have taken at least some knowledge from my experience with me.

I argue, so fucking what? Go to other forums that I frequent, and see my posts. You'll see the same thing. I like to argue. Ask any of my family members. They'll all tell you that I like to argue. It's not all of a sudden because I want to be like you. I've been argumentative for many years. As for the "acting like you", I have no clue how I even attempt to act like you. I don't want to be you, and I certainly don't waste my time attempting to be like you.

I passed the state's educational assessment program (MEAP). I get $2500 over the course of two years, so I get half my community college paid for, basically. So that leaves me a lot of money for upgrades
