Firefox has been identified in having code that could cause damage to your computer.

Exploit:

Mozilla and Firefox are prone to a vulnerability that may permit a malicious Web page to spoof the source of a download.

This may be used in a social engineering attack that entices a user to download a malicious file under the assumption that it is coming from a trusted source.

I think this was recent as it was in a mag i recently read. It has also been pacthed and in the nightly builds section.

Quote:Topic: Firefox Exploit OLD
The patch that fixes that among other things was released long before your post.

Whenever there is a firefox update, an arrow pointing upwards with a red background displays in the top right. When ever it appears theres an update, to which you can download a discression.

Yep, it has an automatic update feature. My version of FireFox was patched as soon as the patch came out.
