Because your main file should be "index" not "Index". Just change the case of the I and it'll be fine.

If it's a unix server, probably because your page is Index.htm instead of index.htm. The default document has to be whatever is in the config file of the Web server, and Linux is case sensitive.

My comments are that frames suck, the news thing with the blue burning fire news text has to tall of a table around it, the sides of the tables look like they continue 2 pixels past the bottom of the table, and the main conent area and navigation area are not same height. . .

The way you used frames even makes me cry, it all around looks pretty damn bad.

Ya, you just started learning, but IMO ditch those frames. If done incorrectly(wich is very easy to do) then frames arent a good thing to implement in your site. The Best route I think for you to take is to obtain Dreamweaver Somehow and learn how to use it. I don't use anything else now and its extremely user friendly. All you need to know is how HTML works(and im sure you know alot about what certain tags do) and you'll be fine.

I still don't know why your putting all this work into this site. The sites that are up now are fine.

Second of all, nice flamingtext.com header.... (the gay news header)

Make something original.

I'm working on making a very simple template for my website, because let's face it, all the important sites have a banner and a navigation bar and nothing fancy.

http://www.trielite.net/htmlproject

By the way, does anyone know a way to make a TD element take up the rest of the space that the other TD's aren't taking up? Like, a fill element or something...

Nevermind, using my 1337 skills I put table tags inside table tags and made a ugly template I think it looks okay, though no where near as cool as my current one...

Actually I got rid of that whole idea about keeping the website up that I have right now. I am currently working on yet another template that is organized, simple, and not really fancy. I think it may be the best one yet. But I did figure somthing out:

1) I will never get positive feedback about my website from these forums in my life.

2) Whatever I do will never be good enough for you guys.

3) And three, this is the only place where I can get quick feedback when I need it most.

4) I am going to keep re-doing my wensite until I do get some positve feedback. But unlike last time, I will be using the same topic, but renaming it. And boo hoo if all I talk about is my website? What else is there to talk about? The world is dull right now and some of you guys are nitpicking at the dumbest things I do.

But I am not going to give up hope on my website nd maybe someday you guys will find it in your hearts to say something nice to me or my website. The only true person ho ever stuck up for me in the forums has been SickO.

I will not give up.

Deadfive, you must simply understand that you try, but we just find it annoying. Maybe if you were annoying us with nice looking work, but instead you plague us with topics that are as wanted as dirty socks. Your work would be good, but everyone here that has made fun of you constantly has experience with making websites or graphics, even me. See, if you make a nice looking webpage, maybe read some tutorials, we'd give you lots and lots of positive feedback. Okay? Okay.

Deadfive, stop being such a Renardin. Don't expect to get nothing but rave reviews on your latest version of your site and then don't get all pissy and yell at people when they don't give you compliments. Your sites need work. Improve on the areas that people suggest you work on, and ignore the ones who have nothing constructive at all to say.

For everybody else: deadfive isn't making 4 threads a day about his site, so lay the fuck off. You people are amazing, you can continue to harp on deadfive, but then get all pissy when Aircraftkiller does the same thing.
