My greatest fear is dying in one of the most painfull ways. Such as burning to death, or being tortured to death. (That is more like my only fear.)

What is your greatest fear?

Ugh.. I would hate to be paralyzed from the neck down, or even from the waist, or getting into some type of accident where you are turned into a vegetable and cannot do anything but sit, stare, poop , and on occasion, drool. Any situation where my brain is still working but my body cannot function properly would be a real drag and probably not worth staying alive for.

I'm afraid of Structural Instability. Everywhere I go I'm doing load calculations and trying to figure out where weight is being carried. I don't go very high in large buildings either. The highest I've ever been is the 9th floor. It also makes rollercoasters a challenge but ones that are well built are fine.

Going blind, or paralysed and unable to move. I wouldn't mind being deaf but being blind I'd probably want to kill myself; there's too much of a loss with blindness.

If I went blind, deaf, or anything of the sort, I would kill myself.

If I somehow became paralyzed, I would somehow get somebody to kill me. Or I would ride my wheelchair off of a cliff. ;D

(If there are any grammar mistakes in this reply, please correct me. With grammar, I really need all the help I can get.)

Being kept alive as a human veggie. I've told my parents time and time again -- If I am ever disabled in a mental way, or if I am paralyzed from the neck down (waist down I could live with) I would not want to be kept alive.

They can keep me for a couple of months, but after that, part me out n' burn whats left. No need for a 20 000 dollar funeral here.
