Here is my idea. I want to create a clan that trains, uses tactics, follows commands, has a hierarchy (that rotates each game or day or week or something) and is totally hardcore about the game. Anyone interested? If so, please respond. If I get enough people interested, my plan is to spend the first 2 months figuring out a schedule, getting everyone the maps and teamspeak, figuring out a clan name, and spending at least one hour a week training together. If this goes through, we should have a lot of fun and have a lot of talent. Lets do this guys!!!! (Noobs who learn fast and don't mind spending extra time training with me are welcome to join but keep in mind, once the group is established, anyone can be voted out by a majority vote in the group because they continue to play bad over time, are mean, dont work as a tema or take orders, etc...)

Obviously "we" are not that good, or rather, cannot even be judged. We are currently just me. I am good at the game however. The thing that really seems to be lacking in all renegade games is team coherence and strategy. Even clans cannot seem to set up a good hieratchy. While each player is good, the team as a whole is not always. My plan was to get people to work together, cooperate, and see the big picture. Also, I wanted to use some military tactics (the ones that would work in this game, not all of them obviously). Since you all scoff and dont seem to care however, I will make a clan in another game, hope you wont miss my military strategy and combat, both real and in game, experience. Later Noobs.

I suggest Halo. We need some coordination in that game. Atleast one clan that plays in clan wars does, anyway. Most times when I play against a team that's full of clan members in the same clan, I see alot of people making fatal mistakes. Albeit I've never been in a clan war match before, it's still not a good thing to see some of the better single players that are in a clan get their asses kicked by a bunch of people who barely know how to move and shoot. Yes, I've been on one of those teams and won before. Mostly through my ability to dodge and hide when I've got the flag.

You're three years too late to starting a new clan.

Not to mention it's been done before. If you played when RED was here or knew anything about them; you'd see that it doesn't work out so well

Ahhh the evolution of the "super clans".

Every so often a clan emerges --extremely disciplined and focused. Everything seems to be going great for the first couple of weeks ... then BAM ... something goes wrong and the clan takes a serious blow. This has happened to a handful of clans.

Take some advice from someone who intimately knows this game, has been around since demo, and has been a leader of one of these "super clans" ..... it's not going to work out. Not anymore.

Just find a reputable clan and help make them stronger. Or if you're hell bent on making a new clan -- focus on making a clan that will stick around for awhile rather than one that is going to own everyone. The community needs good competative clans to compete. It does not need one more clan trying to crush the competition with rigid discipline.

At least that's what I think.

If it wasn't meant to be replied to the thread would be locked.   I was throwing my 2cents in on a sarchastic thread since I had been MIA from the forums for over 2 months.

Don't hate.

Hell yeah!

I'm up for some military action. I try to use tactics during regular multi games but no one ever listens. hahaha. But anyways, yeah you can count me in. I'm a great shot with the sniper rifle and I like to be the forward observer.

My sn is
- HSOJ0001 - on the Westwood server.

My Email is
