I'm still at work so here are some pictures of my desk at work. Please bear in mind:

1. My cellphone camera takes really crappy pics (not even vga quality)
  2. We are moving to another office in 2 weeks so my desk is a total mess

I've also installed cathode lights since those pics.

Stuff:

2.6GHz p4 (being replaced with an athlon 64 4000+ soon)
NEC shite mobo (being replaced with an MSI NEO2 mobo soon)
80GB Seagate HDD (being replaced with a Samsung 160gb 7200rpm SATA HDD)
External 160GB HDD for backups.
256MB Geforce 6800 GT
1024MB (2x 512) PCI2700 33MHz RAM (hopefully to be upgraded to 4x 1GB sticks when I get a job with decent hours)
DVD-Writer
DVD drive
Philips Sonicege 5.1 Sound Card
5.1 100watt surround sound
5 port USB hub (1 internal)
Netgear network adapter
4 case fans
400watt PSU
Digital Media Pro Keyboard
Packard bell mouse
Casio EXilim Digital Camera
And best of all, a torch, just in case!

If you look around you can usually get a good 19' LCD monitor for about $250 (after rebate usually) or a 17' for less.

Too bad LCDs have to run at their native resolution or the graphics will look like shit. For the higher end LCDs, they require 1600x1200 and higher (19 inch+). You'd need some powerful hardware to play many of the newer games at that resolution.

I dont like LCD i like CRT it doesnt leave tails of stuff when you move to fast. Ex. grab a window on the screen on a CRT it doesnt leave a copy of itself. The only LCD i had did that all the time. So i sold it.

That's called ghosting and it is affected by the response time on your TFT. For example, my TFT is 12ms, anything over ~20ms then you'll see ghosting.

I NEVER have ghosting on my TFT, so your statement is opinion is slightly wrong.

He's right about that, and that's another reason why I have never bought an LCD screen yet.

spazbeast wrote on Fri, 18 November 2005 13:00Yet?

It doesn't completely stop me from buying one. I could get one if my computer was incredibly fast, then I can always use the native resolution. I actually can right now, but my current CRT can't do that without making it look like shit.

I'm mostly waiting for OLED screens to come out.
