So I pull up into Burger King one afternoon for a nice good meal and park right smack in front of a nice big fucking sign. I took a picture for you guys:

As you can see, an angry citizen had already taken action and I applaud his actions.

How dare they try to tell me that I can't eat in my own damned car?

I know it's their damned parking lot but it's MY fucking car and I would be eating their own damned food bought with MY money from my pocket.

Any opinions?

EDIT: Oh and with like 5 Burger King trash cans all over the lot, I don't think any person would be that retarded to throw trash on the lot.

If you walked in the exercise would be good for you. Maybe they just want more Americans to try out this exercise thing. On another note you could always step out of the car and eat it on the car as a loophole.

Unfortunately people will still throw the rubbish under the car, rather than use the bins.

Easy solution for you. DONT USE THAT BK.

My truck has a tonneau cover, so whenever I hit drive-thru, I use the covered box as a table. Works fine, and you can hose off the ketchup.

I've never seen a sign like that though. If anything, it's done so that sit-in customers have a place to park, instead of a bunch of drive-thru'ers taking up spaces. After all, at least at my nearby McDonalds, the drive-thru is faster than standing in line.

They cannot tell me what I can and cannot do in my car. If this was a normal rule, no one would notice it and no one would have any problems with it. But because it is so retarded and abnormal, it gets noticed by people.

IMO, a law (a good, fair and well written law) is supposed to make people automatically obey it without any complaints. A good law does not incite people to rebel against it.

You seem to be missing the 'By order of the township' part. Seems to be the local council banned you from eating in your cars, NOT Burger King themselves. Probably some gay twats who live near it complained because a chip box blew onto their lawn one day.

Burger King probably hate the ban because it discourages people from buying from them...

I still think that BK has the right to prohibit people from eating on their property (outside on the parking lot) but I don't think they should have the power to prohibit people from eating inside their cars even if the car was in their lot.

I dunno about others views' but to me, they simply cannot come inside my car. It's ridiculous.

Besides, think about how the heck will they be able to enforce this ridiculous law? I don't think this law can be enforced other than the sternly worded sign.

Oh I know! BK hires extra staff on parking lot patrols to enforce this law...they go around the lot and look into cars where there are people eating and kindly point to the sign and tell them to stop.

I say, just go park nearby and eat in your car there. There are probably other businesses nearby with parking lots.

Anyway, in a related story... we have this Mexican food joint that we used to love to go to. It's just about the best food you can get after midnight, and unlike other Mexican food places, this one cooks the food in plain view of the customers.

Anyway, the problem was, if you went between 2-3am, which is after the bars close at 2, there was ALWAYS a bunch of drunken degenerates. We saw it all, black and Mexican gangsters getting into fights in the parking lot, whores of every shape and size, and even the occasional homeless guy who would come in to use the "water" feature on the soda machine to give himself a little bath.

Eventually, the police got tired of having to come to this place every Friday and Saturday night to break up a fight, arrest people, and occasionally call an ambulance for the guy who just got beat on the pavement. They forced this business to close its doors from 12am - 5am every night. I personally believe this is a huge abuse of power, especially because this business probably brought in hundreds of dollars per hour during those hours and they're being hurt by this. I don't understand why the police are allowed to do this. We rarely go anymore because we generally went after poker nights or early in the morning when fast food is your only option.

This Burger King thing is equally bullshit, but the sign says "by order of the township", so Burger King is the victim here, being forced to hurt their customers. I'm sure the price of sending a guy out once a day to clean the parking lot is well worth the profit made from all the people who stop there because it has apparently become a place where it's easy and acceptable to get a meal without having to get out of your car.

Question: Is the PARKING LOT under the ownership of the business or the township/third party?

There are many places that do not own their parking lot, but rent it from the people who own the entire lot. This could simply be the township not wanting to put up with it. No abuse of power of any sort if it is the township who still owns the lot (or a neutral third party owns it and who asked that the sign be put up)

Did you know that mashed potatoes is not considered as fast-food? Since it is not fast-food, of course you may need forks and spoons. I am talking about the real fast-foods...burgers, fries, and the drink.
