I have a VPS that i run a few servers on, namely IRCds and IRC bots but also 2 ren servers and a web-server.
I have access to everything i would as if it was a real dedicated server. It runs windows 2003.

My host is a bit picky on how much RAM+CPU i can use, but i feel the amount i pay for it they aren't letting me run enough. Just today i just had a big net-split because they closed an IRCd.

I've had a few viruses since i've had a computer and know that viruses don't tend to want to close (even with task manager). Is it possible to add an entry into the registry to stop a program from being closed? Make windows thing it's a critical process?

EDIT: this was the wrong forum download many antivirus programms... if they will not close... better u get AntiVir it gets all 2 days an update... and it finds all viruses...

I Love AntiVir!

Or you could spend hours hunting them down
I know, I have wasted my time finding them and then hacking with notepad, and replacing their code with a games code so they can be deleted next time windows starts.

I want to stop people closing programs, antivirus stops viruses and there's no point in a VPS with no internet.

Chances are they can just close them anyway, they probably have the "super-admin" (I don't know the proper name) account's details.

The proper name, I would say at least, is "SYSTEM" user access which is quite easy to get to if you know how.
