How the fuck does the retarded monkey in the white house pay for the Iraq War?
Considering the war is costing 2 billion a month, how come inflation hasn't even begun to fully take hold of the US economy?

Don't pay tax, end of war. Everyone happy ^_^

It's called 'debt' . Your parents do it all the time by borrowing on credit.

The government essentially does the same thing. If you would like to see how much the United States is in debt, follow this link:

To put that into perspective a while ago I saw a program that said $8 trillion would buy EVERYTHING in the UK, France, Germany and Italy. I'm not sure if this is entirely accurate today but even so it's pretty mind boggling.

I'm pretty sure we borrow quite a bit of the money from the Chinese. Which is why if we pulled the plug on their imports, they'd pretty much have our nuts in a vice.

The United States isn't making ANY money out there. Companies, like Halliburton, who seemed to profit from the war, aren't doing that great either.

And the Chinese hold trillions in US Currency and T-Bills. However, their economy is so entangled with America's, that any American economic slump will drastically affect the Chinese.

Don't say stuff you don't know are true. If he was pocketing money he would have been impeached. It's not Bush's fault. You are an ignorant fool. American has been in debt for YEARS. Clinton payed off the last bit of the Civil War debt in his term.

ignorant, maybe, but he is right... Just because money is being spent on the war, doesn't mean when the war is over, money will start growing on trees.

The economy is based on the market and how the people react to products in the market. How is some conflict in the middle east going to effect the demand of people who want an iPhone in the US?

Actually, the weapons industry is huge. Of course, our government buys from American military goods corporations. So a lot of what our government is spending overseas is coming back into our nation.

Inflation isn't about the demand and supply of a market. Inflation is how saturated the economy is. The more people spend, the better, but not when the government keeps forcing money into the economy.

Sorry, I phrased it wrong.

What I meant to say is what does soldiers in the middle east have to do with Apple setting a price for the demand of the iPhone in the US.

Cause that is strictly how many people want to buy it in comparison with how much they have to sell. Not how much money they have to pay the government. ..

... or DO they? *thinks about random government conspiracy*

What are you talking about?

Money that the government spends on the war is fed back into our economy. While some government spending is good (ie. WWII for America in the Great Depression), too much causes the inflation because our government seemingly likes to just create money out of thin air.

The supply and demand side of the economy is affected by inflation, not the other way around.

Kinda-sorta.

Now I shall explain something you probably already know:

- Due to the War, oil imports ceased
- supply went down
- price went up
- since people need gas, personal income money went down
- less money = less demand
- less demand = more left over (more supply)
- Company of product needs to balance the price at an equilibrium, thus using the quantity demanded compared to the quantity supplied to calculate the highest price people would willingly buy at.
- People buy product & pay tax
- tax goes to government to fund war effort.

Like I said, cheesosoda, you probably already knew that, but I was explaining it to the other people I originally had a response to.

Well, let's see, before the Iraq War nearly every newspaper was parroting Bush's reasons for invading Iraq, and few people criticized or bothered to check to see if what was being said was true for fear of being called a "traitor", despite the fact that there were mass protests in the US against the war, and then afterwards when public opinion shifted they finally admitted that was a mistake.

And even now newspapers are refusing to report several members of Congress support and filed a resolution to impeach Cheney.

Actually I do, I just wanted to turn this into a bash Bush thread as soon as I heard that the middle and lower classes are paying 1/3 of their income to support this illegal occupation, whereas the wealthy only pay 12-16%.

And I still do play Renegade-only about 1 hour per week.
