Is TeamSpeak only for Clans? If available for others, how is it done? I have followed the links to the TeamSpeak website, but not any help with this question. I downloaded the client software (both versions). Now what?

Well, there is the Teamspeak Client, and the Teamspeak server. You need to have the appropriate bandwidth in order to house a decent server.

When you house a server, your pals and clans, and in theory, everyone else can join up and talk. I'm no expert, but I assume the clarity will also be determinant on how much bandwidth you have.

Like I said, I'm no expert,

Clarity will depend on what codec you use for the server. And there are a few to choose from. If you want higher quality, and lots of people, you're gonna need quite a bit of bandwidth. But if you use a lower quality codec and have few people on, any broadband could easily handle it.

Firstly your gonna need to downlaod the Teamspeak RC2 Client & Server application...

Launch the server to get your admin and super admin passwords...

Right click the server icon in the system tray go to administration now log in as the administratir (using the login informnation t gave you)...

Now you can change all your servers settings here once done customiseing click the user manager now click add client and add all a member now keep doing that until you have all the memebrs you wan't registered...

Now log out and close the browser then right click the icon in the system ray and note down your IP...

Now to log on to your server run the client and click connect then rights click server and hit new server thn enter the name of your server now fill out the details select a aropriate nickname and use a login name you created in the user manager...

The server address is the ip you jotted down, the bottom 3 boxes can be left empty...

There you go now click and your in just give all your members the server adrees and there login names and passwords and let them join...

There is supposed to be a way to allow users to login in anonymously and resgister but I don't know how hope this helps though .

If you are going to run a TS Server goto <http://www.no-ip.com> register for free and get an FTP site name. then download no-ip DUC (update client for IP's). Then instead of giving your IP, which most Broadband providers change on a regularly timed schedule (3 months), people can use the ftp address instead. At the end of the FTP address you put your UDP port. Works great.

mine is k9ftp.myftp.org:8767

BTW my TS will be open to the public starting tonight. I'm going to have it host 20 people.

-Sk8rRIMukHey Sk8,

I will be running the public TS as a regular service, so tomorrow it will still be up. Get some friend together and use it. I will be doing testing on it tonight for unregistered users. I will also be looking for channel admins in the future if it becomes popular.

Now that was one big quote...

OK then I will join sometime tommorow...

I think I know somebody hwo knows teamspeak quite well has, run his own server in the past and would be perfect for the job of admin *cough*me*cough* .

I would love to use your server tonight, if allowed, and if I can figure out how . Should I use version 1 or version 2 of the TeamSpeak client?

voice server is open to the public now TS RC2 client is needed. server address is k9ftp.myftp.org:8767

no password needed and don't check the register box. you can choose your own name. good luck. i may look in later tonight. my typing sucks right now because my daughter is sleeping in my other arm.

Hi, all:

Has anyone been using Teamspeak on an XP Home machine? I'm getting fed up with Roger Wilco at home and want to try something better... Please share your thoughts on this one.
