This is strange.

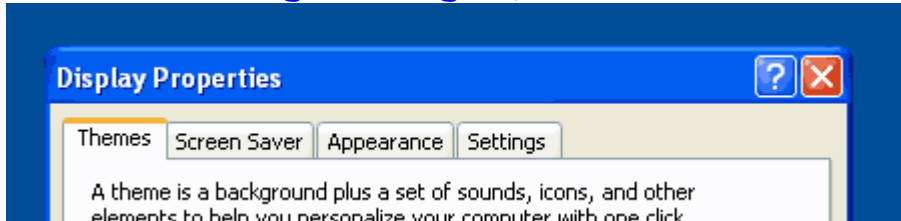

I think I might have edited something I shouldn't have in FreshUI.

This image is not edited other than cropping and reducing the colours to 20.

EDIT: XP sp2

Well, from that informative image I can tell you that you have a blue desktop background and are looking at Display Properties. Other than that I can't tell you anything because I am not psychic and cannot guess what settings you have applied.

I'd just system restore it if you can, I don't know what FreshUI is, but if you want to change your wallpaper now, you might want to just go to Google, find a pic, save it somewhere, and right-click > set as wallpaper.

Something has happened.

Either you have edited a UI .dll file too much or removed the part that processes backgrounds, or you have a virus which has turned it blue, and disabled the "Desktop" tab in the display properties window as you shown.

Can't you right-click on an image and select "Set as Desktop Background".

As for your missing tab, no idea.

I would suggest trying what AoBfrost said > "I'd just system restore if you could"

I hope i've set restore to auto.
I changed it to XP thinking that would fix it, hence the blue background and XP bar across the top.
If you have seen any of the images I've posted on this site (or renhelp) you may have noticed I've never had it set as XP.

Working on the SR now.

You haven't touched UXTheme.dll have you? A lot of third-party themes for Windows XP require you to replace the stock library with a custom one, which can sometimes result in corruption. Just a thought though, it more than likely isn't the case.

Can you upload yours, just incase.

Restored to 2 days ago. Anything before that was behind a lot of installed crud that I don't want to go through again.

Still won't appear.

Stupid Automatic updates is throwing me the restart later/now window. Love to turn it off but I'd always forget to update.

EDIT: I think I know what it is. I edited ntoskrnl.exe in windows/syteam32 attempting to change the boot screen. It didn't work (probably because its now corrupted). I save the original in two places, so I'll go into safe mode, change it back and see if it works.

EDIT2: Darn, still won't work.

There's a group policy which handles that sorta stuff, will see if I can find it

Edit: go to (Registry):

HKEY_CURRENT_USER/Software/Microsoft/CurrentVersion/Policies

Is NoDispBackgroundPage in there? Make sure the value is 0

If that doesn't work, give this a go:

Lol I found that exact method just now.
http://www.kellys-korner-xp.com/xp_b.htm
Will check your second link, as this method did not work.

I actually tried that before I posted here, it didn't work (as it was already set at what it needed to be).
But I read the description (when in the window to change its enabling, there is an extra tab) just now, and it informed me that setting this to Disabled should work. And it did! Thank you!
It also fixed up the ability to show common tasks (But I never use that setting) Sorry for posting the image of it in the wrong thread.

In order to reapply the desktop features you can open it in paint and then select "Set as Background" to add a new theme you have to find the theme and use the .msstyles file to restore it.
