my barracuda (these were taken at thanksgiving.)

It now has no carpet or seats.

1975 eldorado engine an 8.2 liter with only 175 horses (that part sucks)

The second car in the background is a 1957 oldsmobile super 88 four door. My dad is trying to sell it so if you are interested pm me.

are you serious? thats pretty terrible gas milage.

my galant is a 2.4I SOHC 4 cylinder and it now has 160hp (stock was 140) and it gets about 25mpg in the city and 32mpg on highway.

at first i wanted the v6 3.5L version of my car until i saw the gas milage that it gets.... its way worse than mine so i am glad i got the 4 cylinder. for a city car it has pretty good pull, a friend of mine has 2005 sebring with v6 2.7L engine and we are about even until we get to 120km/h then he pulls away are you sure you dont have misfiring or one of the valves or cylinders isnt functioning properly?

That's pretty much it. The 3.8L was an excellent engine during its heyday, and it traces its routes back to the mid-late '80's. Those economy numbers are about right for that engine.

well im not really surprised with the gas economy but the horsepower.... thats something else.

a 3.8L v6 should pump out atleast 200hp, thats why i asked him if he has some misfiring going on or a ceased cylinder or some other mechanical power robbing problem with his engine.

Nope. Hilariously enough, before Ford introduced the new Mustang, they got rid of the 3.8, and brought in a 3.9L which brought the HP to a walloping 190HP, and that was around '04.

Nice find on the engine

Btw, why would i get a 5.7L R/T (Daytona) when i got the 6.1L SRT8 Plus, i like purple.

Challenger, yeah... thats a nice car, but i needed a four door, and the insurance is cheap as hell since it is classed as a full size sedan guess it doesn't matter that your car can do 180+ mph, only that its a big car lol.

i just want to know lol.

cause i only know the prices here in Canada, and they rip you off here.

for example i pay around 2600$/annually. for the insurance on my car, and the most i got it to go is 110mph. its a 4 door and older car.

Holy crap.

I didn't know that the daytona only had a 5.7 in it. It is a cool looking car though and they are better looking than a regular stock charger.

EDIT: My dad estimates that with the 3:11 gear ratio in the back, the 6000 puound cadddy is good for about 130. It will also match an early to mid 90s corvette from a dead standstill with 500 lbs of torque at 2000 rpm.

My stang has the 5.0 and has done the quarter mile in 11.99 seconds. Not bad for a "ford"

Of course, it's not the stock setup either

TBH though most frods do suck, including many of the mustang models. Probably one of the best frods was the Taurus SHO, and that's because it's engine was made by Yamaha I've heard no complaints or disses about the newest model mustangs, and the trucks seem to sell well and hold their value. I'm not a truck person though so I don't care.

You guys should also remember that the 3.8L was dead reliable, and cheap to produce.

You can all hate Ford engine, but you cannot ignore that because of its lack of up-to-date technology, the Mustang was a perennial best seller in its class, because of its price. Fuel efficiency is a moot point, simply because the engine was a simple OHV (pushrod) design, and did not incorporate more efficient, and fancier technologies like DOHC, and computerized power management.

The V6 was never about power, or economy. It was about giving someone the option of a cheap, sporty vehicle, which was fun to drive. If you wanted power, you'd opt for the 4.6L. Plus, the 3.8 wasn't exactly a slouch either.

I just stripped my car down to bare metal last fall. Cut out both quarter panels and replaced them. The motor came out in the summer and the rebuild process started. While the paint was stripped I had to gut the interior to get ready for paint. Mounting my new bucket seats. I'll need to order a set of 4 or 5 point racing harness's soon. Dropped my motor off at a city 2 hours away to be computer balanced.

Ratchet shifter just to make the transmission worth it.

Posi traction to get both of my 12" wide tires spinning. 295-50r15's.

Hopefully I'll get around to a minitub this summer. If not the tires will be sold and smaller ones will be put in. I'm dropping the car down just below stock height.

Paint comes this spring after the snow goes away.

I drive a silver 2001 Chevrolet Impala at 148,000 miles. It's a tough car, looks great, and is one of the few vehicles in the world that has its own logo. I'm buying another one as soon as she gives out on us, the last model made like mine is the 2005 version. The new ones (2006-2010) look too much like Nissans for my tastes.

These aren't photos of my Impala specifically but they'll do.

Is the Impy a 3.4, or a 3.8? The 3.4 had head gasket issues last I checked. But at 148,000, those engines are really just getting started.

Here in ottawa, when you see those impalas you generally slow the fuck down ... police use em as ghost cars

I believe our engine is the 3.8 liter. I haven't checked in a while. It's not just in Canada that the Impala is used as a police vehicle - most police departments, sheriffs, and state troopers in the US use 2001-2005 Impalas since they're very dependable and simple to use. It's also great that my car is generally seen as a police model because I can cruise faster than most other vehicles and not run a high chance of being pulled over in a speed trap; officers are reluctant to pull over cars that may be their own.

Police in my city use Ford Crown Victorias as ghost cars. Anyway, I drive a 1995 Honda Accord EX. It's an awesome car and still runs great.

Picture: Mine's actually blue, but it's still the same damn car.

1985 Chevrolet S-10 Blazer has very little of the stock engine set up yet still passes smog. Has been my primary set of wheels since I started driving.

1973 Volvo 145 Fuel Injected with 400,000 miles on the original engine and transmission. Got it running after it sat for seven years. My Grandparents had taken it to a shop and the shop had it for 3 months and couldn't figure out what was wrong with it. Took my 2 hours and a volt meter. Been a great learning experience working on it since all modern EFI systems were basically derived from the one used on this car.

I remember you having that truck like four years ago. You still need to come out here and see me sometime, or maybe I'll come hit you up if I'm out wherever you ended up wellz... here is my 88' Dodge Shadow ES

2.2L engine built myself. Wisco Pistons, .30 over, Forged Aluminum crankshaft, moper purple camshaft .430 Lift duration is 236-232, Getrag 5 Speed "525"

TrannyBuster T3/T4 Hybrid T04B .63 A/R turbine and .50 A/R hotside A/R pushing 30psi. Chevy 454 fuel injectors, with a volvo warm up injector for overboost, activates at 35PSI or when the EGT hits 1800F, Turbo XS RFL bypass valve.

Needs a intercooler, and a system... maybe a paintjob but I love the sleeper look.

dunno the HP numbers, but I ran a 1/4th mile 11.63@114.730mph (with a AIR/WATER IC)on street tires. Est. Hp from the drag time is 333hp

In Illinois, they use 5.7 Dodge Charger R/Ts as ghost cars. That is something I'd like to see, a ghost cop charger in a car chase. It would look like a street race from far away.

My family has a habit of driving cars into the ground, then piecing them back together and driving them some more.

I'm still here in Southern California, trying to eek out a living at a suck ass job until I get through slow but steady school. Worst part is having little time for gaming anymore.

BMW R1200 RT. My Dad and I split the cost, although I mainly did it so he'd have a nice new bike to ride on while we slowly restore the old Bimmer. About 60 mpg, too.

I don't have it anymore... My parents gave it away. Any how this was pretty much my first and only car. Paid 300$ for it. 290,000+ miles on the first engine. We had to replace the door handle (see blue handle) and the water pump. Other than that though it started every time never fail. It wouldn't go over 45mph though... Oh and it had no exhaust system. At all. The exhaust dumped right off the engine block. It was unbelievably loud. If anyone who was riding with me got a phone call I had to pull over and turn it off. Still I loved that car... It had character.

Why would he care? He'd likely just come on over with no shirt on and drink tons of beer. That's the kind of guy he is. Oh and then maybe drive one of their ATVs down the street and crash into a parked car.

That's a damn nice car, but I guarantee a 2005 SS is much faster. Try this:

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=HAXOPKVykZ8>

There's nothing wrong with a FWD burnout, especially when you can go 0-60 in 6.5 seconds when the best time a 1996 SS could do is 7.1.

But just for the sheer awe, here's a 1996 SS that would fuck you up:

After doing some heavy research into what i should get for my next ride, and looking at the price of gas and what i want for hp out of my car. i found it. also been asking Crimson some questions about how blazer is enjoying his altima coupe. i decided to buy the 2008 altima 2.5S convenience package plus some extra features. basically all i am missing from fully loaded is navi, sunroof and leather. to tell you the truth i can live without them.

here is a pic of the same exact car just not mine, mine is a diff color

<http://en.research.autos.sympatico.msn.ca/autos/vip/gallery.aspx?year=2008&make=Nissan&model=Altima&ts=5861972008>

sorry didnt have much time to look for pics, so posted the shortcut from msn autos

That is a badass 96. Its kinda what I want my affordable dreamcar to be. 1993 Caprice estate wagon...with an LS9 crate motor, 4.11 gears, and nos. The ultimate sleeper with maybe a slightly tunned exhaust.
