It is illegal but I've noticed this forum closes an eye when it concerns the Renegade game. You can't play it on xwis or gamespy without valid serial anyway (unless the server uses a crack).

It's not illegal because you can't do anything without a serial...so if he has his CD case and serial but just lost the media, I'm not worried about the feds busting down my door because I gave out an exact copy of the media he already had.

Didn't you have to bypass the copyright protection on the renegade disc to make that ISO?

I didn't make the ISO, but I don't think that it has any copy protection. In fact, the First Decade version of renegade is using v00d00s nocd exe! Yes, EA is using a nocd crack on TFD.

If you feel the need to report me to the FBI, go ahead, let's see what happens

I'm pretty sure I could call the local FBI field office and say "um yeah, I want to turn myself in because I posted a link to a game that came out before you even took your first law enforcement class...oh yeah and to install and properly play this "warez", you have to use a serial number which you paid for....take me away officer".

It would probably be the highlight of their day. They would send SWAT and at least 200 officers to surround my house. 3 Helicopters, snipers on the neighbors rooftops. Amber alerts too. This menace must be stopped! It's up to you!

I never said I wanted to report you or anything else. I do realise that there's more important things in life than this.

However, this forum has rules wrt Warez. As partner of the forum owner, I think you should set the exemple and respect those rules.

I've noticed that the Warez rule isn't enforced when it concerns Renegade. Not only when you post it, i've seen it posted by others (Oblivion, ...) before and no moderator reacted. That's OK for me, I don't mind. But at least admit then that we make an exception for Renegade.

Your argument is that it isn't Warez. I don't agree. If I post a link here to download C&C3 Kane's Wrath without a key in it, do you think we should allow it?

Subject: Re: Looking For Renegade CD

Honestly, sure why not? If you can't install it or play it without paying for a serial. Just the act of downloading something doesn't automatically make it illegal, otherwise all the "direct2drive" services and sales would be breaking the law.

You can also download ISOs of Windows XP, Vista, etc from MSDN. Of course you need a valid CDKey to install and use them.

Now if the game or application had copy-protection on the disc itself, then I would say that posting a link to a "cracked" copy of it would be illegal. But many games and applications now use the model of having the protection built into the authentication, instead of the media. They could care less who has copies of the media, as having the media doesn't allow you to play the game.

If the guy has his CD jacket with the serial that he paid for, and just lost or broke the actual CD, I don't see anything wrong with him getting it "replaced" by downloading it. He then installs it with his paid-for serial...who is getting hurt by this?

You're conveniently ignoring all the sites proposing keygens and serials for the game you offer for download. How sure are you that ssnipe has his own serial and bought the game? But I suppose you "can't be held responsible for what the people do to get the serial".

I know for a fact that the original renegade cd couldn't be copied due to copy protection software. I found it out when I tried to make a backup copy with Nero in 2004. Donno for TFD.

This isn't about Renegade, btw. I'm just trying to explain my POV on this issue and trying to understand at the same time how this forum needs to be moderated.

You're a American living after the 911, so I wouldn't put it past the FBI or anyone else to come knocking and dress you up in some orange pants for warez.

Complete ISO's are being uploaded right now. GameCD and DataCD. Wait 2 hours until you start to download. Uploading is in progress.

<http://renegade.dmehosting.com/CD's/>

Once you see the file size stop increasing then you know it's safe to download. GameCD.iso is needed to install the game. I'll upload DataCD.iso later. You will need to purchase a serial number to play Renegade however.

That was a ISO for the First Decade. Most people don't have serial numbers for the First Decade DVD. I'll put that back up later.

The first decade installation ISO requires a MAIN serial to be able to install Renegade and any other previous game. So you need a serial for the First Decade cd's that will then give you the ability to install Renegade. Most people don't have serial numbers for the First Decade, just Renegade.

Wait, so because it's POSSIBLE that someone has intent to do something illegal, you think it's wrong to post a link to something that isn't illegal? Give me a fucking break. I hate that ideology. It's that bullshit that allows my government to think it has the right to limit my liberties. Sure, I could be talking on my phone to conspire to kill someone, but I'm not. Should I, then, not be allowed to talk on the phone, especially without government mediation? I don't fucking think so. Using that ideology, you can make up so many excuses to stop people from doing things. You can ban vehicles, knives, guns, fists, scissors, nail files, blunt objects, glass, sticks, etc...

Just giving someone the tool to do something illegal doesn't make that act illegal. If I sell someone a gun, I am not doing anything illegal, or even morally reprehensible if I'm not selling it knowing that the person has evil intentions. The person who bought the gun isn't doing anything illegal, either. Hell, even if he has the INTENTION of using it for something illegal, it is still not a crime until he commits it. Just having a gun in his possession doesn't make him a criminal or his act illegal. Plus, to throw in your keygen sites concern, the guy still has to buy the fucking bullets. That's another act in itself.

Plus, I feel that if you OWN the medium, whatever you do with it should be fine unless you're distributing with the intention of letting people play the game without having their own legal copies.

Should you doubt everybody's intentions at every turn?

All I'm saying is, by what SSnipe was saying, it was implied that he actually had a physical copy. In that case, it's in good faith that he was using the link legally.

Again, you're promoting anything illegal by giving someone something that can be used illegally. As I said, you can make an argument against most household items.

Eh... You might be mixing movies/music with software. In the Netherlands downloading movies or music is legal (but not uploading!), the downloading of software however is illegal if you do not have the required license. If you have a serial you don't always have a license (keygens might generate serials, but do not generate licenses for example).

I'm not. I said pretty much what you said. Downloading isn't illegal in any of the cases. And with sharing serials, I also ment keygens and shit like that

If I where to download a program/game which I don't own myself it's still legal. Basically if you're not using the app if you don't own it you're good.

There is nothing that says you aren't allowed to download it and leave it idle on your PC.

So you can steal, as long as you don't use what you stole for anything.

Eh... You might be mixing movies/music with software. In the Netherlands downloading movies or music is legal (but not uploading!), the downloading of software however is illegal if you do not have the required license. If you have a serial you don't always have a license (keygens might generate serials, but do not generate licenses for example).

Err... There is, at least in the Netherlands. It's called copyright. You are not allowed to copy information unless you have permission by that person to do so. You're probably mistaking because we are allowed to copy art, scientific articles and literature for personal use and study, as these are excluded from the rules around copyright due to a specific law.

The dutch law says nothing about an exception on software and games.

Because I had 2 against me, I searched a bit more; the part where software and games are different is due to an European law that gives them extra protection. It was legal though.

I was wrong that it is (still) legal, although you where wrong about it being part of the dutch law ;P (or I just really couldn't find it there)

You're wrong.

Software has never been legal to "just download" (create/own a copy) without a license.
