Someone said this in college today, and I had to totally agree with them. Dispite the fact that being on the dole isn't good for society.

When you're on the dole, everything is paid for. You get a house, food and could probably run a small car.

When you have a job, even though you're earning money. You spend about 8 hours a day earning that money and it's not easy. You have to pay for: food, bills, your house (mortgage), your car (to get to work) and everything is taxed. The government takes all your money away from you and you're struggling to pay for essentials.

While you're struggling, the people on the dole are doing jack all have no worries. So what's better? Living on the couch, going out for a drink with some freinds? or working 8 hours a day and worrying about money all the time.

You couldn't be more wrong. Being on dole does NOT give you a house or a flat nor does it give you food and it sure as hell isn't going to pay for you to run a small car.

I'd quite happily trade places with someone who is working 8 hours a day for being on the dole. When you're are on the dole you're not just lazing around doing fuck all that I can assure you off. You clearly need to do some more research.

there's housing benefits you can claim.

you wouldn't be able to afford to run a car these days though, I expect... unless my description of the benefits system was an understatement, which it quite likely is.

I am on the dole and the money I recieve each week JUST about covers my food for that week, it sure as hell doesn't pay for a house nor a car or even a ped for that matter. If you already have a flat and then you go on the dole the government will pay the rent otherwise you'd be homeless wouldn't you...And thats just what we need more homeless people. Anyone can apply for a flat but if you're not missing both legs and an arm you will be put on a waiting list which I think is 5 years..

Please do not try and make living on the dole seem like its great because its not. I was much better off when I was working. Atleast then i'd have money to have a few drinks with the lads.

Some people simply are not able to get work.

And there is still a lot of discrimination and racism going on in the world.

For example when a white guy just like most of us solicits for a job and an Arabian or Black guy goes for the job.

They will interview the white guy first, after that the black.
Lately the arabian are getting discriminated like mad.

Looks like we have always have to point @ wellfair.

And i though the american system was, when u dont work and hardly educated u can easely go to the ghetto and crack smoke ur life.
Tell me when im wrong though.

Also the goverment here in holland should open his eyes.
In every country there is hunger.
EVERYBODY stresses out if there is enough money in the wallet.

In my case it was different though, i really had luck that i had a dad that could pay my school and secure my future.
Still i have seen a bad example of my mom how to deal with money, good for me i learned from that.

I for one am not laying around doing fuck all I am on work courses to train for the work I am looking to do. I am putting in the same hours on these courses as I would be if I was doing a plain ol 9-5 yet im not getting 5x the money I would be if I was doing work so you tell me what im better off doing... The system has changed within the last year or two.. If you're just sleeping in til 1pm and playing on your playstation all day the job centre will terminate your money for 6months. I am looking for work at the moment while on this course and I have already been threatened that I would lose my money if I don't have a exceptionally good reason as to why im not working. Don't speak of that which you don't know.

Just because you know a few people that abuse the system doesn't mean we all do.

However, your opinion on the topic we all keep linking to would be appreciated...

In Canada, we essentially have two forms of the 'Dole' : 'Welfare, and 'Employment Insurance' .

'Welfare' or a 'Living Allowance' is pretty much the same thing as the 'Dole' , and is a Provincial jurisdiction.

Employment Insurance is the one I like. With 'EI', as soon as someone gets a job, and is on the payroll, a portion of their weekly, or bi-weekly earnings is sent into a massive fund.

When the person loses their job, they get put on EI. Because they have paid into the fund, the money they receive can equal their previous salary, or be a major percentage of what they previously earned. EI lasts for a relatively short time, but enough for someone to find a new job. Once they are back in the workforce, they automatically begin paying into EI again.

From what I've seen, EI seems to work very nicely, in that the person is much more motivated to find a new job, because the EI payments will run out in a short time. Life on Welfare is comparatively 'dumpy', but many people just seem to 'adjust' to it, and know that until the day they die, they'll be getting the same cheque from the government.

As our friend Caveman has said, he really can't afford to have a pint with the lads, and that just makes life boring, which in turn can make the person unmotivated to pull themselves out of the rut. With EI, a person will be able to run their vehicle to get around and go for interviews, buy decent food, and still be able to have a beer with the boys.

For what it's worth, our federal government has not paid into the EI program since 1990.

Lastly, trooprm02 has no idea what depreciation is, nor does he even know what car he's driving. The 2001 C220 is NOT sold in Canada because it is a CDI. It's likely a C240, and if that's what it is, it's bluebooked for about 12-16K depending on mileage and features. If troop's parents DID pay $37,000 for a seven to eight year old Benz, it'll prove to me that stupidity is indeed hereditary.

It ends when you turn 16 here. Either way, if I go to a shop and buy something, I still pay tax for those who take the dole. When I work in the summer, I get at least the minimum wage of €8.15 an hour, and charged at least 20% on that, though I will be earning somewhat 15-20, that percentage will still rise up, largely..

Although being generally conservative, I am a proponent of free post-secondary education (providing the student attains proper grades, etc). My country pisses away so much cash into stupid ventures that would be better spent on future workforces. It might even lead to governments that don't suck.

I've found that students who take out government loans, work part-time, etc. to pay for their schooling are much better employees at my workplace. As well, I manage a couple apartment buildings, and they also make for better tenants. I think the lack of 'sheltering' is the reason, as they had to learn how to use their heads, and are much more in touch with the real world.

In Belgium, post graduate education costs the parents about 500 € per year inscription money if you odn't have any post graduate degrees yet. The rest is sponsored by the government.

On top of this you can get scholarship to cover most surrounding costs, like books, transport, ...

I think it's a good system to give everyone a fair chance at getting a degree.

OSAP is retarded. My girlfriend had to use it this year, it paid for her school and books but part of the agreement of taking OSAP (in her case) was the amount of money she could make during the school year. It ended up causing more problems than it was worth. Her living conditions changed early on and that may have been the problem. Anyways, college is pretty cheap here and most people can afford it as long as they're living at home.

Check the OSAP website for "conditions to apply". I had aa seminar on it, and was told it was for families with kids going to college/uni that made under X ammount/year, or something like that. For tuition fee's, im strictly talking tuition. Board makes it 2x, but even Canada's top school's (queens,macgill, etc) are under $7,500/year.

Best of luck in Criminology, but it might be useful to figure out what law school is before you start telling people you attend it.

Also, please stop bragging about things your parents have bought you. My parents have money too; one of the things that you will hopefully figure out at school is that no one gives a shit how rich daddy is, and going on about it makes you seem like a giant fag.

Finally, since you weren't satisfied with my response of "collage," let me say this:

- I am not poor.
- Yeah I lived in a shithole. The student ghetto at Queen's University is extremely run down. This is not my personal problem; anyway, it means that you can fuck around and not worry about damaging the beautiful house mommy and daddy bought.
- I am no longer a student as I've just graduated.
- Oh no, you said I'm ugly

Enjoy Ottawa U. With any luck you'll grow up a bit.

EDIT: As far as tuition is concerned, at Queen's my tuition was about $8000 this year, but I was in Engineering. I think tuition for an art sci student was more like $4500.

I dunno about that $60,000 starting figure... but even then, the work required is grueling. Being a legal assistant, and essentially being a go-for for another lawyer is not the easiest job out there. I used to have a couple tenants that came out with a law degree, and half the time they didn't use their suites because they were always out at night researching cases.

apprenticeships are rare now, there like gold dust, and only contracted builder firms do them now (plumbing, plastering etc) it's not very common for other places to do them.

Maybe because some people can't get a job? And they still need money to survive, so if they can't get money legally they will acquire it illegally, through murdering you and stealing your belongings for example.

The idea behind social welfare is to make sure the poor stay out of crime. In Netherland this isn't needed because the jails are 3-star hotels and jail time is really low.

For everything in fact, one is better if they have to work for it, not provided to them.

Why do people brag about their wealth? The only person that actually cares is going to be the one bragging regardless. It's an extremely rude thing to do and will never get you any friends at all. I would much prefer this money to go to the elderly people that actually have to make decisions of whether to have food or heat in the winter. I'm pretty sure if the amount was cut down suddenly people would be starting to find jobs that were apparently never there before. To be frank the elderly deserve it a lot more than someone that doesn't want to work in a supermarket (even only temporarily). These elderly people have done their bit and have paid taxes throughout their lives not to mention the fact that quite a few of them were involved in World War 2.

The fact the have-nots have become upset, who cares.

If you already have a flat and then you go on the dole the government will pay the rent otherwise you'd be homeless wouldn't you...And thats just what we need more homeless people. Anyone can apply for a flat but if you're not missing both legs and an arm you will be put on a waiting list which I think is 5 years..

Please do not try and make living on the dole seem like its great because its not. I was much better off when I was working. Atleast then i'd have money to have a few drinks with the lads.

Plus being ugly doesn't help your cause. Meanwhile I just got my first car, 2001 mercedes-benz C220 ($37,000), n_P.

It's not on topic.

You derailed this thread by jerking off over a car your parents bought you.

You haven't accomplished anything.
No one is impressed by your parents' money.
You are not cool.
Go away.

Your inability to get over a stupid picture reinforces the fact that you've got nothing to say for yourself.

When troop is clearly in the wrong and everyone is acknowledging his stupidity, the only thing he can do is try to divert the attention to someone else.

And he always fails.
