If you could own any car/truck/SUV/Ute/bike/etc in the world, what would it be?

Rules are that it has to be something that is or was available at a retail showroom and that can be driven with a normal car (or motorbike) license.

My dream car is the Holden Ute in Hothouse green, this one:

Bike: '84 Honda CX650 Turbo. My Dad had one years ago but sold it for a car. Only 2500 ever made. Really fast bike for its age. The BEST sounding V2 ever!

CX650T

Car: '90 Audi Quattro 20v. Ever since I was little I have always wanted to own one of these. IT has an amazing engine for its age and keep up with some of the modern 2.5Litre sports cars now'n'days in the wet. Too bad the inside looks really tatty and way way outdated.

'90 Quattro

Edit: I can't spell lol.

Black is the best color for this car. If I could afford one, then I would also get a front spoiler.

I think that if I could get a cool car, with most of the good things of an SUV, it would be a Chevrolet Caprice. With an LS7 crate motor.

I'm seeing an awful lot of sports cars that go really fast but are made out of materials that break if you look at them the wrong way. I just don't get the appeal behind a car that's so fragile that you'd be afraid of the occasional bumper kiss.

My cheap dreamride is a 1996 Caprice Wagon with an LS9 crate motor, camaro front end, and 4.11 Posi in the rear end.

This is the ultimate sleeper wagon.

Dont get me wrong it is a nice car no doubt about that its just that its too over rated. People that drive them think 'oh look I got WRX im king of the road' when in all honestly performance wise its nothing special.

Compared to most cars on US roads, it is defiantly something special.

The Corvette ZO6 came to Europe to show that North America is ready to kick ass. The new Corvette ZR1 will leave the old-world in a cloud of tire smoke. Sorry Lambo.

If I could rock any ride, it'd have to be this.

That is the thing though. As a WRX owner I can assure you that in fact I do own the road.

WRX's are nice, dont get me wrong. i love the awd and the hp on them is really good. ofcourse STI will tear them apart but thats why its another 6000$ more, right? personally i find them on the small side, im a big person... 6' tall and about 240lbs, but then again judging by your pic luv you are not small either lol. for me though there isnt enough room in there. also the gas milage is terrible, but ofcourse thats the trade off you get for having over 250hp. by terrible im talking 18 mpg if you drive like my coworker does... and it runs on premium only. which here is 5.6$/gallon. i would rather go with audi a4 quattro or awd Lexus IS250. they are just 5k more and they have good gas milage, like mid 20's while still needing premium. and obviously they have the awd part down. and while not being as fast they are luxurious will still tear most cars on the road apart... and have the comfort thing nailed down

<http://uncrate.com/stuff/ktm-x-bow/>

I have owned almost most motorcycles but the one that gives me the most pleasure is the very first bike I owned as a teenager

1989 yamaha dt the white one in the pic. not the fastest bike in the world but still has a great smile factor

The KTM reminds me of VW's GX3 from a couple years ago. Interesting how the X-Bow uses an Audi engine, which of course, is a subsidiary of VW.

I wonder if there's a chance Audi will use their new acquisition of Ducati to finally mass-produce a vehicle like the X-Bow for North American consumption.

KTM's aren't too popular where I live. But I do drool over Super Duke's.

I don't think those existed in North America. The 650-single class is pretty much owned by the KLR 650.

Never been an off-road guy. My dad was all about travelling in the country but I've always been a city-slicker. Not sure I want to take a Buell onto a logging road. I'd have to walk home.

yeah I think you would walk home lol but would say in dirt you wouldnt get to far with slick road tyres .

we have lots of soggy soil/dirt over here so off roading is great fun and one of the best ways to see the country side.

this is my fav spot Stanage Edge . Peak District National Park
