No Lets Not Pay Taxes Anyways After Waching This Movie:

<http://video.google.com/videosearch?q=America+Freedom+To+Fashism&emb=0#> I Realized That I Don't Have To Pay Taxes And After Going To This Website: <http://www.nontaxpayer.org/> I Started Learning How Not To Pay Taxes To The I.R.S. Witch Is An Illigal Organization, I Really Got Interested And I Learned That The I.R.S. Would Get On Your Case Really Fast If You Didn't Pay Taxes Therefore I Am Learning On How To Prove That Taxes Are Illigal Maybe By Not Paying Taxes You Can Get A Better Internet Service Provider Than You Have To Play The Game Command And Conquer Renegade But The Bottom Line Is Paying Taxes Is Illigal.

old news, and by taxes it only refers to income tax because it is a direct tax (fair trade, work->pay).

Subject: Re: Lets Pay Taxes.

No... it's about the income tax NOT being a direct tax. A direct tax, in America, must be APPORTIONED. The income tax, that is progressive, does not fit that requirement, thus is illegal.

I never said I agreed with it...but as it stands it is a DIRECT tax, meaning its a universal tax. Indirect is tax on fast food, electronics, the basic sales tax you pay on most things because they are seen as "luxury goods". Thats why eggs, wheat, milk, the very basics you pay little and in most cases no taxes on. The fact the whole purpose of a tax is x million cost/x million people and that its common knowledge that the tax system in America is broken anyway, is a different issue...

It's funny you try to act all smart by countering a point that wasn't even being made.

All I said was that by definition, in the United States, the income tax is NOT a direct tax.

Oh, and you have it all wrong about the indirect tax. Yes, the sales tax is an indirect tax, but them being "luxury goods" doesn't make it an indirect tax. It just means that it's either (a) taxed on the end user given to a middle man, and then given to the government from the middle man, or (b) it's a tax on a business for a good that ultimately gets added into the price, thus it's an "indirect" tax on the individual.

Plus, you have it mixed up. It's not that they're taxed because they're luxury items. It's that the necessities aren't taxed because they're necessities. The non-taxed items are the exception, not the luxuries.

I don't mind paying taxes either but swiping 30 to 35% of your paycheck to feed the Leviathan is a bit much, this of course doesn't include the many other taxes that the local, state, and federal government gets from you.

As large as my government is, America still have more freedom than most countries, like the UK and Russia, and ESPECIALLY more than China and NK. However, it's not significantly more. Speaking out against Islam? Link me to the news article, unless they were being racist or discriminative, I can side with you, But I generally dislike racist people so no sweat for me.

As for taxes, that's the price you pay for living in a privileged country, Free education, Dole if you're down on luck, council houses, child support, Once you live here, food & cloth is relatively cheap, But I live in Liverpool so it's always been cheap here.. but we're now capitalizing on the Capital of Bullshit 2008 so prices have gone up due to Tourists.

I know of some Brits that came to America, first hated it, but then realized that America > England. 'nuff said.

I hate my government. I hate the state that it is in. We care too much about national safety when it'd be easy enough to be safe within our borders if we stopped pointless wars in the Middle East. I don't receive welfare, social security, so I should not have to be paying for that, at all. I don't benefit from Homeland Security, regardless of what Bush tries to say. Even if I did, I don't want the service, and I certainly don't want to pay for it.

If others benefit from me paying taxes like tax on gasoline, fine. I really don't care. However, I shouldn't be paying for services I don't receive. Period.

Basically, When I start paying taxes I'll be happy I'm helping my fellow country men/women. I'm in no way patriotic, but when they get a job and I receive some of their money when I'm down on my luck for work, it's a win win situation, However, I don't agree giving drug addicts my money to feed their habit, or others that piss their money on alcohol, I'd rather they shape up and get a job, or get an education then try and get a job, at least they're trying to which I'll be happy about.

However, I don't agree with everything being taxed, Certain stuff is overtaxed here, I'll admit it, I don't buy stuff that costs £300 @ RRP, because then I'll have to pay extra on tax, so I guess thinking about what you're buying saves you dosh.

You'll be paying for services that you'll benefit from in soon time, And if not, your family might, children (If you somehow end up with them in later time), etc.

But.. I have to ask, How does tax come into the factor of "Being free" ?

Besides, if you truly want to be "free", Learn to control all your emotions, then when you're not emotionally motivated, that's when you'll truly be free, but that's just philosophy, so you don't have to agree with that.

Perhaps it's wrong to associate "freedom" with "liberty". However, when I do say "free" I mean having all of my liberties that aren't needed to give up for society to continue.

I have no problem with giving up money to help the less fortunate. In fact, I think it's our duty as moral agents to help those in need. That doesn't mean the government needs to deem a portion of my wages (which are NOT profit) to be strictly for them. That's my choice how little or much I want to give. Not to mention that the government always does a piss poor job of managing taxpayer money. Wouldn't you rather see a trustworthy organization helping those that are worthy of the help rather than a wasteful government throwing money at everybody without a job, regardless of how unworthy they are of the handouts?

Private organizations and the collective of people working together are a lot more efficient than a big government. Sure, you can rattle off all of the services that are provided by your government, but there's also a lot of waste in there, and it's not just "oh well", that's somebody's money, hell, if you have a job, it's YOUR money being wasted.

Yes, I know, money isn't that important. Other people are more important than money, but it's still the money that I traded my labor for. Again, if I want to help the poor so bad, I'll donate my money and my time on my own accord and not at the demand of my government.

Edit: http://news.bbc.co.uk/2/hi/uk_news/magazine/7508404.stm <--- that's the story about the knives.

Well Tecknically Speaking America "Is The Only.". Country That Is Free Most Or All Other Countries Are Socialist And You Have To Pay A Lot Of Taxes Like 48 Percent On Things I Think. Then I suggest that you don't think. Clearly you don't have the brainpower to do so anyway.

I Suggest That You Eat Some Tiberium I Think.
I suggest that you never post in a political/hot topics thread ever again.
Ever.
