That really sucks, man.

I don't really know of any method of installing the video off of this particular player. If all else fails, you could just use some screen recorder and record the video yourself.

Try one of these.

http://mashable.com/2007/05/05/download-youtube-video/

You'll have to find what the name of the flash video is, I cant remember how to do it in Google Chrome but get the page source or look at the media tab in the options window in Firefox.

Going to one of these sites can capture it as the flash itself or convert to AVI.

If youd like a better quality one, you can probably get it from the news station that filmed it in its entirety free or for a small fee.

Sorry to hear of your loss.

That really is bad, F.F.S. coulden't he just have been peaceful and played Renegade like the rest of us, but here is how you download the video, if you use Firefox, it is prefferable that you do, get this addon https://addons.mozilla.org/en-US/firefox/addon/3590 then you install it, go to the website, then go to the corner click on the little picture and download it. If that doesen't work you can try this program http://rapidshare.com/files/66308943/SnagIt_8.2.3.rar there you go you can now get it.

Sucks to hear man.

Heres a copy of it incase you haven't been able to record/download it.

I recorded this with an app i have to AVI then converted to WMV with windows movie maker.

Its on the highest quality I could get it at, so idk you might be able to find or do something better.

Anyways heres the video::

http://vixy.net is what I use personally, although it works best with YouTube it can work with any FlashVideo based video file, so long as you know it's complete URL.
