Swine flu is automatically an ironic pandemic for rooting itself in Israel early on. I also want to start a conspiracy theory that this is a biological attack aimed at the US caused by the drop in burrito sales due to the recession.

It's already giving nutjobs another argument to stop brown people from entering the Mexican/U.S. border.

Plus, Mexico is already in dire straits, and this might be another event that pushes it over the edge.

They're taking it seriously where I work...

My employer asked me yesterday to fill in a form that declared I have not been to Mexico in the last few weeks, and if I was planning on traveling there any time soon. It wasn't even him who wanted the info, he was passing it on to people who we are contracted to.

I'm sure it's illegal for them to pass that info on, data protection act and all that. Plus, is it even legal for them to be asking me private, personal questions like that about where I will be holidaying?

I think it's a liberty.

Travel declaration forms are all part of the precautions we have to take. It has happened a lot for me since I stay in Asia and SARS pretty much caused schools and institutions to close down a few years back.

Where i'm from they closed the entire city and county school systems down till atleast mon and the Alabama High School Sports Association canceled everything wed and is starting to tentively schedule stuff again.

Personally, I think they are taking this way too seriously. Like a few of you said earlier, this will pass just like bird flu and sars and all that other bs.

Probably from a Southpark episode then.

They've now shut down all elementary schools where i'm from until May 14th because of this.

800 cases worldwide.....over 4 billion people in the world.....let's worry about AIDS and Malaria and shit that kills millions each year.

lol I'm pretty sure that since the entire world freaking out about this that 30-40% of the population of the UK will not get this unless some asshole goes around coughing and breathing on everybody. People (not directed at you Pyr0) are retarded sometimes.

MRSA can be transmitted outside of hospitals too, it is a mild bacteria that affects the skin (afaik). Which is immune to most anti-biotics, including your own immune system. Which is why it is deadly.

EDIT:I think the first occurrence was in a hospital, though. Mainly because of all the anti-biotics they use.
