That's great, but not as if it'll stop people from pirating stuff anyways. Only now it means that file-sharers will have one less 'legitimate' excuse to support their reasoning for pirating goods.

Still, it's nice to know I won't be fucked around by DRM, even though I was awesome enough to buy music. It made no real sense to punish me and other legitimate customers because of other people acting illegally.

Awesome, now I won't have to buy "rentals".

Meanwhile, EA and other companies continue to ship games with rootkits.

Also, Digg sucks. Why not just link to the article?

Already read it on reddit

I wonder if the gaming industry's cards will fall the same way. DRM that destroys hardware is bad.

Woah - I thought all it could do was block access.

I believe it was StarForce which was known to render some people's optical drives useless.
