So what happened with keys.cfg?

I remember with 3.44 it defaulted to having several keys defined in the .cfg (for instance, I believe that by default SSGM would define some key I don't remember as displaying the !c4 prompt when you pressed it). But now, my .cfg is entirely empty and the dialog built into Renegade doesn't even seem to do anything unless I define a key myself in the file.

What gives?

P.S. When I say the dialog built into Renegade, I mean the one that was implemented in TT.

Hm, doesn't TT provide a decent keys.cfg file? I thought it did, but can't check it now... If not, then indeed it should.

I've never seen such a custom file. The only software that provided a keys.cfg file was Core Patch (2 I think).

TT put my keys.cfg file in My Documents\Renegade\Client (I have Windows XP), and it has key bindings assigned. I don't remember if I had to paste an old version I had when I was running 3.4.4 in there, but the keys are currently defined in there (including some that were unique to the Black-Cell servers), and working (assuming the server will respond to some of the shortcuts). TT apparently sent keycfg.exe into the C:\Westwood\Renegade\backup and C:\Westwood\Renegade\backup\tools folders, but since it's a version of keycfg.exe that was bundled with an old version of scripts.dll, I would just manually edit the keys.cfg to be safe.

Here's a working copy if anyone wants it. Just place it in your data folder.
