It's a known issue, we don't know what causes it, but basically one value gets set to NaN and everything that interacts with it will also get set to NaN since it can't perform maths on NaN, thus shooting a player with a 0 score will spread the 0 score bug to you too very often. It'll spread from player to player until the game ends or everyone has 0 score.

itoxics quote says that the startup score is -2147483647 (I assume that means from the XWIS menu), which is the smallest possible value for an integer... interesting behavior to developers, anyway. but it seems they know of this already. hopefully a fix is found sometime!
